FOREWORD

For some time it has been my desire to write something about the origin, character and development of my people and the region from which they came and went. I do not claim that I am qualified to write the story as it deserves to be written, but I believe I can, with pardonable assurance, make the claim that I know much more about the section, the time and the people, than any other interested person of my lineage. I am willing to admit that I do not have the literary skill necessary to do full justice to my task. I do believe, without question, I can claim that my age, observation, the time I have spent at many places of record, seeking and finding information and facts, at least qualify me as a competent witness of authority, over and beyond those who might disagree with some of the things I intend to say.

There are still some people who ask the question, "Why all this fuss about genealogy? Why live in the past? What is the use of it, anyway?" One might say it can be a hobby, an avocation. Psychologists claim that it is good for a man to have a hobby on which to spend spare time; something to study and to improve his knowledge of the world and its ways. Genealogy is a study of family origin and the ways of people, the times that existed as these individuals and families came along. All this makes history. It has been said that every man should study the past in order to understand the present, and anticipate the future. Individuals make up towns, cities and states, so in the first and last analyses the individual does count and you cannot escape from the fact that our ancestors were human beings. They lived and breathed, had their joys and pleasures, their trials and tribulations. Their work and play was no different from ours. You will also find that, modestly or prominently, they took part in the affairs of the country during their times, and did contribute in some way to this democracy, so by learning more about them and their times you will be wiser in knowing more about how you "got that way."

It would be impossible to appreciate and understand the conditions and the times that existed in the different sections of the country that our forefathers inhabited, what they found on arrival, and what caused them to move in the first place, without a study of the history affecting our lives, happiness and sections of the country.

After much thought and discussion it was decided that I should select and read about three good American histories and from the information given by this study I personally feel that all Sewells who have a Southern history, are the direct descendants of one Samuel Sewell, Senior, and wife, Elizabeth, who came to Rowan County, North Carolina, before the Revolutionary War, and who are now buried in that County. I have been unable to verify the exact dates of their births but from deeds still extant in Maryland, we can be reasonably sure of the approximate year in which they left Maryland, where in Anne Arundel County Samuel was born, and from land grants on file in North Carolina, the approximate year and date of their arrival in that State.

According to tradition the immigrant forefathers were from England. In examination of the Franklin County, Georgia, United States Census for 1850, there were twelve families all Sewells living at the time in Franklin County, the heads of four families of whom were named John. In several instances the children of John and Elizabeth bore the same given names as other Sewell children. I have noticed this was a great practice among my people in previous generations.

But in these pages you will find that our Sewells are descended from Henry Sewell, who came to Virginia, most likely from England, ca 1620, and established himself at Sewell's Point, at the mouth of Elizabeth River, and opposite Elizabeth City. His son, Henry, went to Maryland in ca 1661 and settled on the Severn River. He died in 1691. His son, Henry, died in 1726 (see photostats of their wills elsewhere herein). He left a son, Samuel, who went to North Carolina, and his sons went to Georgia in 1800 and founded the Sewell families of that State.

J U S T A W O R D

I have never written a book before, but I have observed in reading them that they always begin with a preface. I have also noticed that by whatever name called, the preface serves as an apology, or excuse, offered by the Author to his readers for having written the book at all.

I have always loved to read history, because after all the history of a nation is only the history of villages and communities.

I am proud that I am a native born Georgian, "Born and bred" in Carroll County. There is little I can say about my personal history that may be considered worth while, but if my life and service have been of value to my people and my country, these people deserve more credit than I would be willing to claim for myself, for without them I would be helpless in this undertaking.

I was born on July 20, 1895, at Carrollton, Georgia, the second son of a family of three. My father, James A. Sewell, was born in Coweta County on a farm in the Cedar Creek District. His father was named Levi Francis Sewell, who married Martha F. Morgan, January 2, 1865. He was born in Madison County, Georgia, the second child of John Asberry Sewell and Martha Polk. Levi Francis Sewell, my grandfather, served in the War Between the States.

My father, James A. Sewell, came into existence in 1869, after the war was over, and was the only Sewell who did not participate. I served in France during World War One and both my sons saw service in our conflict with Germany. My grandsons, Worley III, who is five years old; William (Bill) who is three; and Elwood III (Biff) who is two, will take their places in defense of their country, should the occasion demand.

My mother's name was Lyda Ann Worley, daughter of Captain C. W. Worley, of Roopville, Georgia. He served under the Confederate flag.

I have spoken freely of my people because so much more can be said of them than can be said of me, and I wish it to be known that my people on both sides of the house have been soldiers on every occasion when this country and its causes needed defense. And may I say just one more word in this connection. I have always believed that my mother was the most perfect Christian that I have ever known. She had a code of rules that she lived by every day of her life, and when her final summons came, she was not afraid of death. It is a fact known by all who knew her, that she was never known to speak a word of harm of any person. It was her motto and she advised her children: "If you cannot say something nice about a person, do not say anything at all." Such a Christian life as hers so inspired me that I learned to respect and reverence every person's religion, whether I agree with his belief or not. And so, if I were in the wilds of Africa and should see a savage worship his snake, I would stand before him with uncovered head, for I know that inherently, mankind must worship something.

THE URGE

It was not until two years after the death of my mother that I became interested in my ancestors. I always loved and greatly admired both my grandparents and spent many happy summers visiting in their home during my childhood, but this association was lost to me after we moved away and I saw very little of them after that time.

It never occurred to me who were responsible for these old people being here—who their parents might have been, and for all I knew they were the first here, probably, the same as Adam and Eve, until my father came to live with me after his illness. It was then that he began to reminisce and that my interest was aroused to learn more about my people.

It was necessary to return him to Atlanta to attend to some unfinished business and on this trip we paid a visit to those places he so frequently mentioned, which took us into Alabama where his grandfather was buried.

I have gone a long way since in a matter of research that has proven both exciting and fascinating, and while I have been unable to identify all the family groups I have been most fortunate in acquiring my own lineage. All the information of my own people, prior to Asberry's day was taken from County records but in most cases previous to Asberry, were given by his descendants.

Some of the brothers, aside from tradition, are unaccounted for. The United States census was not available until 1820 and then only the head of family groups were mentioned; all others were identified by sex, either male or female, in their respective age groups. This method was repeated through the 1840 census, when the Government began listing the complete family group by their names.

REMINISCENCES

The first sixteen years of my life were spent in Carrollton, where my brother and I attended school and did chores at home. We were responsible for feeding the cow and what stock my father found necessary to keep on the place. There were logs to cut, fires to make and times for play, usually on Saturdays. We engaged in all the fun and play that was commonly available to most small town children. There were no telephones, electricity, or water works until 1903, so I was a good sized boy before any public utilities were brought in. We had no cement streets or sidewalks and all travel was done by horse and buggy or wagon.

I remember so well the first auto brought to my town. It was a Reo, made chain driven and cranked from the side. Our neighbor, Dr. Hambrick, who lived across the road from our place was the owner of this wonder machine and how proud I was to be so closely identified with this family as to be permitted to assist in the washing and polishing of the car. To merely press the rubber bulb of the speed demon's horn, which projected off from the driver's seat, gave me a thrill of delight. Many a time I was called over to assist the family in pushing off during heavy, muddy weather. I excelled over all others in putting on the tire chain. One could always locate the doctor's whereabouts by the exhaust of the motor and many times, to my boyish delight, have I heard him pass the school house during recitation period and watched the teacher frown in disgust at the noise and clatter of his machine. Moreover, he'd always toss out a couple of honks before leaving the class to the peril of the teacher.

Our Saturday chores were finished off in a fast business like manner. The quicker we completed the tasks of the day, the more time available for marbles and other sports. We indulged in almost anything that struck our fancy, or was available to us, provided it offered the maximum in excitement and did not require excess thought and discretion.

We mastered the art of rolling our own cigarettes from coffee beans which were beaten into grounds, then wrapped and rolled to imitate a cigarette. In the fall of the year our taste would turn to rabbit tobacco, and dry corn silk. The rabbit tobacco was found in the woods and pastures. There was a gorgeous bed growing not far from the swimming hole that we visited every Saturday afternoon during the season. Regular expeditions were made by the gang and usually one was appointed to bring in a supply. Brown wrapping paper was always preferred but many of our cigarettes were consumed in newspaper wrappings.

I recall the time when my parents purchased a new porch set for the house. My mother instructed me to carry the old settee, which was fashioned from wicker or rattan similar to the grapevine, down to the barn loft. My aunt was coming in from the country in a few weeks and my mother wanted her sister to have this old relic. My brother and I managed to fish it up and into the loft, among the hay and hens' nests, there to remain until called for. It was not long before some of my friends discovered it made excellent smoking material. You can imagine what happened to that settee. Foraging for something to smoke no longer became necessary. Our visits to the swimming hole dropped to a new low. We spent hours playing around the barn and it was not until twenty-five years later that my mother was told that rats did not destroy the settee.

Why the barn did not burn down is a mystery to me, with six or eight boys lying around the hay loft, smoking long strips of wicker. I can still recall how the old varnish would fry and sputter as we sucked away on the twigs of this furniture piece. Within about three months we had it down to the bare frame. All interest around the barn then vanished for something more exciting.

Many times have I shuddered at an incident which took place not too far from our home. My family was spending the day with friends who lived on the outskirts of Carrollton, and who had two boys a few years our senior, so naturally the company provided us with entertainment galore during our visit. A railroad track ran some distance across the back of their place, and these boys knew the time trains were accustomed to passing and called our attention to the fact that one was due shortly and that we could wreck it. Having a good head start we proceeded to gather any and all kinds of things to pile on the tracks. Rocks, rail spikes, plow points, and garden tools were strewn up and down the path, and as more substantial material became scarce, we resorted to pulling up corn stalks from a nearby corn field. The engineer and fireman must have both been asleep, or else they could have seen the huge pile of debris we had placed in their path. I can still see cornstalks flying, as the train passed on through the blockade and have often thought of a terrible wreck that could have happened, of the death and property damage, not to mention the sorrow and grief brought to my parents. Expressions of youth bring much anxiety, sometimes sorrow to many parents in the upbringing of their young, and I am thoroughly convinced that not always are they totally responsible for their acts of indiscretion, nor for the influence of their friends and associates. It is a fact that most young people worship the companionship of their elders and through this connection they acquire habits that sometimes lead to misfortune and sorrow.

My parents moved to Atlanta during my last years of high school and aside from a siege of instruction in Algebra by a private tutor there, my education was at a standstill until the following September when I entered old Emory College at Oxford, Georgia. It was many years later that Candler Foundation endowed a new Emory in Atlanta, which is a leading college of the South.

I later married Frances Gresham, an Atlanta girl, and six years after, came to West Palm Beach where I entered business for myself. My wife and I have been blessed with four children; two sons, Worley Junior, and James, and two daughters, Mary Ann and Frances. Worley is in business with me, while James is a physician, now taking post-graduate work in Baltimore. Both Worley and James are married: Worley to Miss Frances Heard, of Deland, Florida; James to Miss Elizabeth Nixon, of Chattanooga, Tennessee. Worley and Frances have two sons, Worley III and William; James and Elizabeth have twin daughters, Amy and Ann, and two daughters born later, Elizabeth Nalley and Frances Gresham.

Our daughters: Mary Ann, the eldest, was married in 1950 to Elwood Newton, of Augusta, Georgia. They have a son, Elwood III, and a daughter, Mary Dantz; Frances, the youngest, married Harold Brown. They have no children at this writing.

A favorite verse in our family is "The Bridge Builders," whose author's name is unknown to me:

THE BRIDGE BUILDERS

"Old man," said a fellow pilgrim near,
"You're wasting your time building here;
You will never pass this way again;
You have crossed the chasm deep and wide,
Why build this bridge at eventide?"

The builder lifted his old gray head;
"Good friend, in the path I have come," he said,
"There follows after me today
A youth who must pass by this way.
This chasm has been as naught to me,
To that fair haired youth may a pitfall be;
He, too, must cross in the twilight dim;
Good friend, I am building the bridge for him."

SKETCH OF MY GRANDFATHERS

My grandfather Sewell never cared for fishing nor any other sport that I can recall. He was a quiet, retiring individual, an excellent farmer and a good business man who left all the gabble to his wife. She was a small, stocky built, industrious type whose energy never ceased, possessed a wonderful faculty of getting along with people and was excellent company for any one. She told me much about Sherman's March Through Georgia, long before I ever read of the man in history and through these impressions I had no difficulty in forming an early opinion of the General.

This brings me to the time when Horace, my brother, and I, were visiting at Grandfather's home during a summer vacation in my teens.

Among the stock kept on the place was a pet horse called "Doc." No one was permitted to drive him but my grandfather and I never saw him used except with a buggy which was always new and shiny looking, even to the buggy whip which served strictly as an ornament. Grandfather never scolded old Doc, although he did give words of encouragement through the lines, by slight pulls and jerks, but nothing severe.

Grandpa usually drove to Bowden two or three times a week and to ride in the buggy with him was a treat. We worried, however, because he would not require Doc to run. Doc probably figured he had all day to make the trip and never took the hint. He walked as though counting the steps much to the disgust of Horace and me.

Something came up one day when Grandpa could not well take the trip, so we finally persuaded him to let us do the errand for him. He finally agreed under one condition: we could go in the buggy, provided we did not trot Doc. About a quarter of a mile from the house the road curved around and out of sight. My brother was driving and I was sitting on the whip side. We both surveyed the road from the back, just to make sure. Horace gave me the get-busy signal. I know that was the first time old Doc had run in ten years. We put him through all the paces from there on, but ran into trouble on the way back. Doc was doing such a variety of steps that he worked up a luxuriant lather, and the walk from the curve should have been much further. Grandpa met us as we pulled into the yard. He looked Doc over carefully, then he divided his attention between us three, and without saying one word abused us horribly, finally he broke his silence by telling us to go into the house. I watched Grandfather through the window, rubbing Doc down with a sack, and could hear him speak gently to his horse. He never mentioned the matter to us again, but we knew better than to bring it up ourselves, or to ask permission to drive Doc again.

My grandfather, Captain C. W. Worley, was a wise, venerable old gentleman who spent many years as Ordinary of Carroll County, Georgia. He was a great hunter and fisherman, and may I mention right here that both these sports were a profession with me. He was always ready to go, and I never kept him waiting. I was always eager to share in his pleasures, but in those youthful days it never occurred to me that an old man might have hours of loneliness and pain. But the years in passing have brought me to an appreciation of a beautiful verse by Ella Wheeler Wilcox:

“Feast and the halls are crowded;
Fast, and the world goes by.
Succeed and give, and it helps you live,
But no man can help you die.
There is room in the halls of pleasure,
For a long and lordly train;
But one by one we must all file on,
Through the narrow aisles of pain.”

CHAPTER ONE

THE INDIANS — ORIGIN

When the first white men came to this land of ours, they found it was occupied by a race of men vastly different from them in color, in features, in language, in religion, and in their way of life. These native inhabitants they called "Indians," because the long sought land of India was thought to have been found. But this was not India. They described the "Indians" as "red" but here again they erred, as our Indian was never of a red complexion, but more of a copper hue.

The origin of the aboriginal inhabitants is an unsolved mystery after nearly five centuries have come and gone and many famous scientists who gave their best thought and research to the problem of whence the Indians came have gone with them, leaving us without any positive solution.

The truth, probably is that they were both Asiatics and Africans. Some authorities think that the Eskimos and some other Northern tribes came to North America from Northern Asia, using the Aleutian Islands as stepping stones, and also the ice bridge of Bering Straits. Others think Chinese and Japanese ships may have been blown out of their course and wrecked on our western shores or drifted hence in prehistoric times. The Northern Indian tribes differ radically in stature, speech, features and customs from those of the Southern climes.

The Incas of Peru and the Aztecs, Mexico, and the Mayas of Central America, present some differences, but all were in a high state of civilization and culture when the Spaniards overran them. We are indebted to Messrs. Abbot and Prescott, historians, for the most interesting accounts of the royal splendor in which the rulers lived before the gold greedy Conquistadores came. It is pleasant to turn from stories of savagery and brutal atrocity as practiced here in our land by the fierce Indian tribes, to read of a marvelous system of orderly government in the land of the Inca emperors. It is perhaps not generally understood that "Inca" was a title, the title of the Emperor, not the name of a race or a nation. Now, in our accustomed way, we group all under one name and all are known as Incas, from the fact that they were and are in the land of the Incas. The people were Peruvians.

According to the belief of the natives, the Incas were princes of the Sun, the God of their religion, who descended one day to earth to reign over their Peruvian subjects, as benevolent despots. They established a wonderful system of agriculture, being in all probability the first to terrace their farms to avoid erosion. They built a splendid system of broad, paved highways and established a fine governmental system. Their architects designed commodious dwellings and enormous and beautiful temples, some of which, built of huge blocks of stone each weighing tons, notably the Temple of the Sun in Cuzco, have stood the test of Time and earthquakes, and still rear their heads in lofty beauty and grandeur, the admiration of the modern world, and speaking volumes in stone of the genius of a people unenlightened and unlettered, according to our modern concept, but with infinite capacity to plan and execute lasting works of art on a grand scale. They worked out beautiful and intricate designs with unerring artistic instinct and skill, creating beauty in metal objects large and small.

The remains of James Sewell, Sr., and wife Margaret are buried in Mount Olive Cemetery at Saint Mark, Meriweather County, Georgia. Several other Sewells rest there. A tall sand stone monument stands on family lot but all inscription is illegible.

John and Mary are buried on the old Sewell place out in an open pasture near the Hudson River Baptist Church in Banks County, Georgia.

The Mayas of Yucatan and Central America were cousins to the Incas, according to the best authorities and the great art treasures redeemed from jungle and pyramid at Chuchen, Itza and at other points in this region in comparatively recent years, after lying buried for centuries, tell their story of an amazing people and a culture of high order. Like the Egyptians, they built great pyramids, giving strength to the theory that they originated in that land and were familiar with its culture. They had some knowledge of Astronomy and Horology and were acquainted with more science, perhaps, than our modern scientists. They invented and used a stone calendar, dividing the year into months and seasons, but it is supposed that most scientific knowledge was confined to the priests, and perhaps there was not a stone calendar in every home!

These ancient and glorious civilizations are now "one with Nineveh and Tyre," and like those other ancient cities, they keep their secrets well—by and by all will be revealed. (1, 2, 3)

Ed Hamner, of Attalla, Alabama, once a member of Congress and a student of Indianology for many years, held to the theory that the Incas and other South and Central American Indians came from Africa over a causeway that for centuries existed between the northern parts of that continent and South America. He supported his theory by comparison of striking similarities of art, hieroglyphics, physical characteristics, speech, and culture, the pyramids, showing Egyptian or Assyrian influence, language as shown by the hieroglyphics, and many customs revealed in the same manner.

But we are concerned here principally with the North American Indians of our present United States and shall turn from the intriguing consideration of the glamorous and mystical Southerner to his less civilized and untutored brother of the North.

Despite the rough and nomadic life which was led by these Indians, their fierce wars and barbarous practices, they seem, in the South especially, with some similarity of language, feature, customs, and personality, to be closely related to the Mexicans. The Pueblos and the Cliff Dwellers of the West also, like the Mexicans, lived in communal dwellings of stone or adobe, made crude cloth and pottery and were surely Sun worshippers. They irrigated and cultivated large areas of arid land and left crude paintings on their walls, but their art was but a faint reflection of that of the Aztecs and other families of the South. They were lower on the mental scale, but these Indians, with those of the lower Mississippi Valley were emigrants from Mexico. (4)

The Eastern nations from the Carolinas northward were Algonquins, Iroquois, Mohawks, Cayugas, Senecas, Oneidas, and Onandagas. The last five formed a Confederacy and called themselves "The Long House" and were called by the Colonists, "The Five Nations." Later, the Tuscaroras of Virginia and North Carolina joined them, making the sixth. (5)

It can be said of all these nations that their origin is still obscure, but there is no doubt that they succeeded past civilizations of which there is no written history, and nothing beyond Indian lore and legend to build upon, these being very unreliable sources.

In the Pacific Coast region were the Californians, descendants of whom are still found in California, Oregon, Idaho, Utah, most of these probably of Asiatic origin.

In the Middle West, or Plains region, were the savage and war-like Sioux or Dakotas. Origin is anybody's guess. (6)

INDIANS: Features, Physical Characteristics, Dress, Occupations, Habits, Customs, Religion, Social Characteristics.

FEATURES

The American Indian was more copper colored than red, the nose was more or less aquiline, the jaws firm, cheek bones high, figure straight and athletic, toes slightly turned in, appearance dignified and formidable to strangers, expression stoical under some circumstances, great reserve, the whole conveying the impression of great thought and ability to take care of himself. The brave was clean shaven and often handsome and the young girls beautiful. The eyes of both sexes were dark and piercing and the hair black and straight.

DRESS

In winter, both sexes wrapped themselves in robes made of animal pelts, but in summer they decked themselves in lighter and briefer garb. Summer dress for the men consisted generally of a short apron made of a wild animal pelt, while the women were clothed in skins from neck to knees. The women also used a homemade paint over the body, and both sexes applied a coat of special paint in winter to repel the cold. Of course the braves applied war paint extravagantly in war times, and the regalia of a Chief was more ornate, with plumes of bright feathers, than the dress of a brave.

OCCUPATIONS — HABITS — CUSTOMS

The braves occupied themselves mainly with fishing and hunting and warring. They were expert at all three. They believed in the doctrine "The woman's place is in the home," and added a little something to it—"do all the work." So the squaws kept the wigwam, tended the crops, bore and reared the papoose and it is not written that there was any conflict. There was only one big pot to clean, so no argument about doing the dishes. She would have divorced her husband, probably, if he had offered to perform this menial service, which was definitely recognized as woman's work. Some of the women were good farmers and it is said that the Creeks, in the South, were very quick to adopt European farming methods from the Whites and at the outbreak of the Revolution were not far behind them in efficiency. The Creeks are said to have had a high degree of intelligence. (8)

RELIGION

The Indians believed in a Great Spirit who created all things and they also believed in evil spirits and belief in religious observances was deep seated. They believed in a life beyond the grave in a Happy Hunting Ground for them and their dogs. They were notably improvident in life, but provided pottery and other useful articles to be buried with the dead for use in the life beyond. They believed the air was surcharged with spirits, good and bad. There was a Manitou or incarnate spirit for every animal and every plant. Their dances had a religious meaning and also the healing art, presided over by the Medicine Man, who was a powerful influence. There was considerable virtue, however, in their remedies concocted from bark, herbs, and roots, which came in time to be appreciated by the Whites, along with their vapor baths. (10)

SPIRITUAL CHARACTERISTICS

The brave was master of his wigwam and of the squaws whom he purchased of their fathers and enslaved. He could divorce them at will. His family was not large nevertheless, as there was a heavy mortality rate among infants. In design of their wigwams, every tribe had features peculiar to itself. Writers of that day tell us that the squaws were poor housekeepers and the wigwams filthy and the occupants swarmed with vermin. They were kind to friends and hospitable to strangers who were not under suspicion, merciless to enemies, sparing no White. But instances are related where prisoners were snatched from the stake and adopted into the family of the rescuer—for instance, the well known case of Captain John Smith in Virginia, who was rescued by Princess Pocahontas. The Indian was reserved in council and among strangers, but dropped his dignity around his own fireside, where he became very talkative, telling one comic tale after another, some of them quite un-Victorian. The Indian was essentially a Nomad and very improvident.

ECONOMY

The economy of the Indians was based upon the barter of various items. Friendly tribes exchanged articles produced in their regions for products of others. They had no currency. Later, when Europeans came, the "Indian Trader" came into being, carrying on his business by horseback, going hundreds of miles into Indian country, visiting the various nations, exchanging manufactured goods, guns and ammunition, silks, satins and baubles, to his advantage for priceless pelts and incidentally introducing the liquor habit to men who knew nothing of this vice before, which was responsible for many of the troubles between Indians and Colonists. Valuable articles and tracts of land, changed from red hands to white for the consideration of a bottle of whiskey. Braves secured other articles of food, while squaws sowed and reaped crops of maize.

CHAPTER TWO

AMERICA IN THE YEAR 1606

FRENCH, SPANISH, AND ENGLISH CLAIMS EARLY EXPLORATIONS – DISCOVERIES – COLONIES

The period between the years 1492 and 1600 was for England and the Western European nations a period of feverish activity. The discovery of America had fanned to flame the desire held by all nations to find a Northwestern passage to India by the sea, and aroused amongst the young a spirit of adventure and discovery.

Led by such men as Christopher Columbus, who made three voyages to the New World and discovered South American mainland on the third (May 1498); John Cabot of England and his son Sebastian, discovered Cape Breton off New Foundland, 24 June 1497, came south as far as Chesapeake Bay, May 1498); Vasco de Gama of Portugal, who sailed around the Cape of Good Hope and into the harbor of Calicut (Calcutta), India, thus being the first to find a Southeast passage to India (May 20, 1798); Balboa, who discovered the Pacific, and at Darien in 1513 laid claim to it in the name of the King of Spain; Narvaez, who in 1528 landed on Boca Ciega Bay in Florida on a spot now within the city of Saint Petersburg, and made an unsuccessful exploration of the unexplored Gulf and western parts of the country; the first expedition through the Continent made in the quest for gold, ending in California, with only four men surviving, including Cabeza de Vaca, the treasurer of the expedition and also its historian Hernando de Soto; Cortez, who conquered the great Axtec Empire of Mexico and the Mayas of Yucatan and Central America; Pizarro, the conqueror of Peru, and many others; bold, adventurous, avaricious leaders, youngsters imbued with a lust for adventure and older heads feverish in their lust for gold, ever gold, flocked to the standards of these leaders under their various flags and were off to the New World in search of fortune and thrills. Their enthusiasm on departure knew no bounds but alas! hundreds, perhaps thousands were seeing the last of their native lands, and a great number of those who were so fortunate as to return, were beggared, and lived out their lives as paupers.

FRENCH

As early as 1501 Contreal, a Frenchman, penetrated into the estuary of the Saint Lawrence River, in Canada, on the North shore, to where hills could be seen on both sides. In 1504, fishermen from Brittany and Normandy were in Newfoundland and from that time forward permanent settlements of French, Spanish and Portuguese were there, their small huts and drying scaffolds erected along the shore, and Newfoundland became an important factor in the early colonization of the French and British possessions; a base of supplies for both

French and British possessions; and a most important fishing ground. (18). 1534-1535: voyages of exploration were made by Verazzano and Cartier for France, down the Saint Lawrence, but no settlements were attempted until 1551, when one was established by Cartier near Quebec. In 1600 De Monts, a Calvinist, was given theater vice-royalty and fur trade monopoly of Arcadia, with religious freedom granted to the Huguenots, but the Indians were to be taught the Roman Catholic doctrine. De Monts established a settlement first on an island near the present boundary line between the States of Maine and New Brunswick in 1604, but it moved the next spring to Annapolis—then Port Royal. It was visited by successive misfortunes—was abandoned in 1607. In 1608 Champlain set up a permanent French post on the Cliff at Quebec. (14) The French made an attempt to colonize Florida, when the mouth of the Saint Johns River was discovered by Jean Ribault in 1562, but no mention is made of a settlement at that time. Instead, Ribault is said to have sailed up Broad River (probably the Savannah or Santee is meant, as the Broad is a wholly inland stream uniting with the Congaree to form the Santee.) He left a party of 26 colonists at Port Royal, but they went home the next year, 1563, abandoning the enterprise. It was Ribault who gave the newly explored territory the name of Carolina, in honor of his young king, Charles IX.

Another French expedition, led by Reni Goulaine de Laudonniere, was aided by the King and Protestant in personnel, it is said sought Carolina, but perhaps unfortunately for them, settled on the Saint John's River in Florida. They were a dissolute lot. Loudonniere was forced to hang some for acts of piracy against Spanish vessels; others were captured by the Spaniards and sold into slavery, the remaining ones lost the respect of their Indian neighbors and matters were in a serious state when an English slave trader Hawkins gave them succor in 1565. (15)

Their existence as a colony and on this earth was not long protracted, however. Catholic King Philip II, of Spain, taking cognizance of the fact that French Protestants were settling in Florida, sent his man Melendez from Saint Augustine with a large force, with announced intention to "gibbet and behead all the Protestants in this region." This purpose was fully carried out as the estimate of the number massacred, French and Spanish agree, was not far from nine hundred. The French King Charles, in 1568, being a boy and under Spanish influence, relinquished claim of France to any part of Florida. (16)

SPANISH

The year 1513 marked the first visit of the Spaniard to the mainland of North America. Ponce de Leon, governor of Porto Rico, came to Florida in search of his lost youth. He had been told that in Florida a fountain, the waters of which, if he would drink, would restore his youthful vitality and spirits, was to be found. He was an old and worn out soldier and doomed to a sad disappointment, for he failed to find the fabled fount. He returned to Porto Rico, a "sadder but wiser man"; and it is supposed, like the old soldier in the song, "just faded away."

The next Spanish explorer on the American scene was Pamfilo de Narvaez, (18) who landed with three hundred grandees of Spain at a point on the shores of Boca Ciega Bay, within the confines of the city of St. Petersburg, Florida. A marker reciting the fact that this was the first expedition of white men to set forth to explore the interior of the North American continent, has been erected on the spot. This expedition had for its main object the discovery of gold and wandered through the deserts and wildernesses of the Gulf and the West for eight years, their numbers decimated by illness, hardships and Indian attacks to only four when the remnant arrived at Culiacan on the Gulf of California, in May 1536. (19) One of the four was Cabeza de Vaca, treasurer and historian of the group.

In 1519 (20) Pineda visited the northern shore of the Gulf of Mexico, and in 1520 (20) Vasquez led a slave hunting expedition into South Carolina, naming the country Chicore.

The successful conquest of Mexico, brilliantly executed by Cortez, was the bright spot in the Spanish picture in that period—1519-21. (21) Chicore was visited by Vasquez again in 1525, but the Indians proved too tough and embittered and results were disastrous. Gomez, meanwhile, was cruising along the Atlantic Coast from Newfoundland to New Jersey and building up a nice fur trade. (22)

The town of Culican, at the mouth of the Gulf of California, was established in 1530 and in 1535 agents of Cortez were claiming the lower California Peninsula. (23)

In 1530 reports were brought by native slaves to the Spaniards in Mexico of what they called "the Seven Cities of Cibola," where gold and silver was had in such lavish abundance that household utensils were made of these metals. An expedition led by Guzman suffered great hardships but found nothing. In 1540 another expedition led by Coronado, inspired by tales of Cabeza de Vaca, who claimed to have seen the Seven Cities, ended in disappointment. The cities were found to be but ordinary pueblos in Arizona or New Mexico, like the communal dwellings of the Moquis and Zunis of today, and the mild inhabitants, far from wealthy, were impoverished farmers patiently tilling their irrigated fields. (24)

In 1539, Hernando de Soto, set out from the Bay of Esperitu Santo in Florida, to win fame and fortune as the conqueror of the unconquered North American Indians. Like former attempts, his expedition, larger and better equipped than the ones who had gone before, wound up in tragic defeat and death to the leader who was buried secretly by night, by his followers in the black waters of the Mississippi, May 21, 1542. De Soto is said to have been a favorite of Pizarro who conquered Peru in 1532. (25)

Fifty years had passed since Columbus discovered the Windward Islands but Spain had no sort of foothold in the mainland of the North, now our United States. In the Southwest the Franciscan friars opened missions in 1582 in the valleys of the Rio Grande and the Gila. Santa Fe was established in 1598 as the seat of Spanish power in the North. (26)

In Florida, after the Huguenots were exterminated, Spain laid claim to all that territory but she was weakened by an attack by the French Huguenot, De Gorges, and seemed too weak to develop the territory any further and in 1600 she held only Santa Fe, New Mexico, the Rio Grande and Gila missions and Saint Augustine, Florida, now in the territory of the United States. (27)

ENGLISH

England under Catholic King Henry VII did not immediately take advantage of the discoveries of the Cabots, due to the King's religious scruples. He did not want and perhaps feared to antagonize the Pope who in papal bull had awarded, in a fit of generosity, the whole of North America to Spain.

But in 1533, Henry VIII, after disposing of his queen, Catherine, of Aragon, of that same Spain, felt free to pursue his own independent course, free from Spanish obligations, and he aspired to make of England a great sea power. His successor (1547) Edward VI was a progressive and gave such effective encouragement to the Newfoundland fisheries that the number of English ships engaged in the business in 1574, in the reign of Elizabeth was increased to between thirty and fifty making yearly trips to the Grand Banks. (28)

During the reign of "good Queen Bess" several maritime projects were popular—the Northwest Passage—American colonization and freebooting voyages. Writers on travel subject and map making flourished. In 1576-1578 vain efforts were made to find gold in Labrador, by three expeditions led by Martin Frobisher. Sir Francis Drake, in a buccaneering jaunt around the world explored the Pacific Coast of our United States as far as Cape Blanco (1579) in an unsuccessful search for the fabled short cut through the continent by water. (29)

Sir Humphrey Gilbert, soldier and member of Parliament, and step-brother of Sir Walter Raleigh, recognized the importance of Newfoundland as the base for the English settlements in the New World, equipped a squadron and with Sir Walter to lead the way, went out to take possession in 1579. Storms broke over them and forced them back, but another fleet was equipped in 1583 and met with the hoped for success. Sir Humphrey landed at Saint Johns, and took possession of the island for the queen. He found that four hundred vessels, mainly Spanish and Portuguese, were annual visitors to the port. He examined the neighboring mainland and loaded his ships with a glistening rock, represented to him as silver bearing by an ignorant, unskilled expert. En route home Gilbert and his ship were lost and the one carrying the phony silver reached Falmouth in safety. (29)

Two vessels under Raleigh auspices set out in 1584, commanded by Philip Amadas and Arthur Barlowe. They landed at Roanoke and reported themselves as charmed with country and people but made no settlement. Raleigh was enthused by the report; knighted, had his claim confirmed and named the country Virginia for the virgin queen and entertained visions of establishing a large province and enjoying a fine income from rentals. (30)

With the aid of the queen in 1585 he sent out seven ships and one hundred and eight colonists. Sir Richard Grenville commanded the fleet and Ralph Lane the prospective settlers, an efficient soldier. Grenville sailed around the Canaries for the purpose of picking up Spanish prizes to meet some of the expenses of the trip. He bagged a few and went on his way. (30)

Manteo, a native, returning to his homeland, was with them and secured for them a warm reception from the Indians. But Grenville made the grievous error of treating harshly, causing mutual distrust between the Indians and the Colonists. The Indians to divide the forces of the English, told Lane of a country near the western ocean abounding in rich ores and pearls and he ascended Roanoke River in 1586 looking for the fabled country. After enduring peril, hardship and disappointment he returned in the nick of time to break up a conspiracy to attack the garrison. (31)

These colonists were infused with the spirit of adventure and wealth seeking and not adapted to the quiet, uneventful pursuit of agriculture and it was not long before they went down before a wave of nostalgia. (31)

Sir Francis Drake in June 1586 paid the colony a friendly visit and was persuaded to pick the colonists up and take them back to England.

A few days after their departure a supply ship sent out by Raleigh arrived to find the place deserted. Soon after Grenville came with three well equipped vessels and left fifteen men to renew the colonizing experiment. (31)

Raleigh was undismayed. Again he fitted out an expedition at his own expense, for Elizabeth had had enough. John White arrived with Raleigh's new colonists off the North Carolina shores. At Roanoke he found deer quietly grazing, the fort in ruins and the fifteen men left by Grenville the year before dead, their bones bleaching in the sun. (31)

On the 18th of August, Eleanor Dare, daughter of White, gave birth to a daughter who was promptly named Virginia after the country and Virginia Dare was the first white child of English parents born on what became United States soil. (31)

White departed for England within a few days for supplies leaving behind eighty nine men, seventeen women and two children. (31)

In 1591 White returned to Roanoke to find it deserted and no trace of his daughter or the other colonists. Only the word "Croatan" carved on a tree, and could not be understood, and no key to its meaning has been found to this day. (31)

In spite of the prodigious and costly efforts made to colonize, the close of the Sixteenth Century found no single English settlement on our shores. (31)

Sir Walter Raleigh, called the father of English colonization, was a ruined man, having lost £40,000 in his enterprise. (31)

Thus we find in a general review of the situation in 1600 that none of the Europeans had made much progress in developing the new empires across the seas and England none.

France had permanent settlements in Arcadia and Quebec—Spain in the Rio Grande and Gila region and in Saint Augustine, Florida. England was soon to make settlements in Virginia, the Carolinas and New England, about which you will read in the chapter following.

When we recall the fact that early settlers in America sometimes found good hunting grounds by following an eagle in his search for game, we are reminded of the following quotation from the Good Book:

"There are three things which are too wonderful for me, yea, four which I know not; the way of an eagle in the air; the way of a serpent upon the rock; the way of a ship in the midst of the sea; and the way of a man with a maid."

Proverbs 30: 18-19

CHAPTER THREE

(1600 - 1700)

COLONIZATION NECESSARY — A GOVERNMENT PROBLEM

In the preceding pages you have read of the aborigines, their natures, customs and appearance; now at the beginning of the seventeenth century, when the white man has met with little success in colonization and the red man remains master of the situation, let us have a look for a moment at the policies of the several maritime nations with regard to colonization.

The underlying motives for colonization were several, but in the main they were the spirit of adventure, the greed for gain, discontent of human nature whether with the colony or politics of the homeland, and desire for religious freedom.

THE SPANISH COLONY

The discoveries made by Spain in America had been in rich but physically weak lands, hence the natives were easily outgeneraled and overpowered. She won by sweeping conquest in short but brilliant campaigns and in 1600 her suzerainty was extended over a vast territory in the South and West, as she ruled undisputedly over Peru, Central America, Mexico and the country north and northwest of the Gulf of Mexico, the greater part of the West Indies and the coast of Florida, and claimed all of the Southern third of the present United States and the greater part of South America, except Guinea and Brazil. But the easy conquests acted as a sedative, taking away the desire, even had the people been capable of it, to painfully subdue the jungles and the fierce warriors of Florida with no further reward in sight than the possession of virgin soil, and unsuited and unequal to the task, she frittered away the colonization funds allotted by both home and colonial governments. The brilliant conquests of Mexico, Central America and Peru had whetted their appetites for wealth, and they dreamed of adventure and gold rather than of quiet pastoral life. Thwaites says (Epochs of American History, Volume I, page 47), "Their aims were sordid, their State was loosely knit, their commercial policy was rigidly exclusive, their morals were lax, and their treatment of the savages was cruel, despite the tendency of the colonies to amalgamate with the latter, and thus to descend in the scale of civilization. The effect of the specie so easily acquired in Mexico and Peru was to make Spain rapidly rich without manufactures, but her people were thereby demoralized and unfitted for the ordinary channels of employment and her rulers were corrupted and enfeebled; in the end the country was impoverished, declining as rapidly as it had risen. Spain's glory was fast waning both in the New and the Old World at the close of the sixteenth century." From the foregoing we can see that the policy of Spain in 1600 toward colonization was one of indifference, the government wasteful, the people demoralized and the bright star of adventure, conquest, glory and wealth in rapid decline.

FRENCH POLICY

The history of French policy begins with the erection of Port Royal in 1604 founded by De Monts and Quebec in 1608 by Champlain.

The French were not overenthusiastic about colonizing and they were good fighters and adaptable and had no scruples against intermarriage, improving the stock in contrast with the Spaniards. They made bosom friends and constant companions of the red brothers and succeeded in persuading the latter to join them in a mutual defense-offense pact against the English whose advance in agricultural possessions posed a menace to their fur trade.

The French went about their colonizing quietly and persistently and would have succeeded in greater measure but for the mistaken and unfortunate political and ecclesiastical policies of their rulers. Louis XIV was king, a most unstable one and extravagant, his court rampant with intrigue, corruption, jealousies and dissension. As a result the Huguenots who began the French colonization in America were sadly neglected in Florida and then expelled from France by the Edict of Nantes (1685). They were eager to join their brethren in Canada but they were deliberately, by priestly rule, excluded from the colonies which they could have welded into a strong New France, and so were forced to join the English on the southern coast. The colonies were liberally supported by the government, but suffered from frequent royal intervention and countermands.

The downfall and ruin of France in the New World was caused by its own government and religion, and the tendency of the colonists to neglect agriculture in favor of the fur trade. (33)

DUTCH AND SWEDISH POLICY

Holland was the most densely populated of the maritime states, but her people were not so seized with the desire to emigrate as to find new fields for trade expansion. She was the most important in the carrying commerce of any of the western European nations. She went after business rather than empire enlargement, and her main efforts were concentrated in the East in preference to the West. It was while seeking the northwest passage to India that Hendrick Hudson discovered and sailed up the Hudson in 1609. The Dutch made religion a secondary matter to trade, and made no haste in establishing settlements, but profiting from their considerate treatment of the Indians, in sharp contrast with the French who were fighting with the Iroquois just to the north, patiently built up an important trade with them, finally making a deal with them for the island of Manhattan, resulting very much to their enrichment and profit. This was in 1626, seventeen years after Hudson's voyage of discovery, illustrating the great conservation and shrewd and skilled salesmanship of the Hollander, also the national character of persistence. The settlement of New Amsterdam, now New York, was an investment that may be said to have paid excellent dividends to the Dutch, though they held it only thirty eight years. The English took over in 1664. Thus the Dutch passed out of American scenes so far as their government was concerned. Private citizens remained to make important contributions to the success of the colonies and their descendants to the republic. (34)

The Swedish established a colony on the Delaware, planned by King Gustavus Adolphus to become "the jewel of the crown." It flourished for a time but the monarch dying, the colony languished with the design not fully carried out.

HENRY SEWELL ARRIVES — THE SEWELL PAGEANT BEGINS

It is 1610 in Virginia, a far cry from the discovery of America by Columbus in 1492. Colonies have been born and died, and a few have come to stay. The search for gold, once a fever, now is better controlled, the forests have been penetrated, the land has been cleared, and homes built, churches erected. Farms have been tilled. The red man has been pushed back from the coast line but still holds the vast reaches of the hinterland.

Seeing his vast hunting grounds disappear the Indian has become a resentful foe and has made depredations upon the homes and holdings of the white man, but has met with stout resistance. Not yet can the ownership of the Englishman be firmly established but he opposes with the traditional determination and doggedness that has made him conqueror over apparently insurmountable obstacles in many situations and in many parts of the globe.

Jamestown is three years old and shows signs of permanence. Bold and adventurous souls are being added to her small company and the march of civilization goes steadily on.

In the next few pages I will endeavor to show the reasons underlying the colonization schemes of England and the favorable policy of the mother country toward her colonies, which resulted in stabilizing these groups to an extent not realized in the colonies founded by the Spanish, French, and Dutch, in their new possessions in North America. The conditions in Virginia at this time and events leading up to them, will be spread before the reader, with a slight digression for information and comparison with other English colonies existing at times.

The pageant of our Sewell Family in America, which began about this time, began in about 1610 with the arrival in the colony from England, of Henry Sewell, a wealthy young man, to establish his home on Sewell's Point, marry and beget children to increase and multiply until they are now a great host, "occupying the land." From Virginia the name has been carried to Maryland, thence to North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Florida and maybe "the isles of the sea."

Let's leave this introduction just here and turn our attention to some things that the historians tell us of the background and development of the Virginia colony at this early date.

AMERICA IS COLONIZED — BRITISH POLICY

In addition to being a hardy people, capable and free to develop and push independent enterprises, the policy adopted by England toward her colonies was clearly responsible for the fact that she was the only one of the Maritime powers of the time that established and maintained settlements for very long. She was slow to become very active in colonization because she had been weakened by war with Spain, and thought it unwise and inexpedient to offend her stronger neighbors. Nevertheless, her young men sailed the Seven Seas as freebooters in search of adventure and prizes and were profiting by the training, and all the while English sea power was growing.

Shortly after beginning of the seventeenth century she felt strong enough to launch and maintain a colonization program and one hundred and forty three colonists embarked in three ships — "The Discovery," the "Good Speed," and the "Susan Constant," on the 19th of December, 1606, for Virginia, in the charge of Christopher Newport, a reputable seaman with whom the expedition sighted land on April 16th, 1607 and soon entered Chesapeake Bay, naming the outlying capes Henry and Charles after the young princes, (1) the river which they ascended, James, in honor of the king. Dropping anchor fifty miles upstream they selected (2) a site for a town "on a low peninsula half buried in the tide at high water," and called it Jamestown.

It should be said here that the expedition was financed and sent out by the London Company. At this time it was so difficult to obtain aid from private individuals for such enterprises, Englishmen having become wary of such schemes, that it was decided to float them through trading companies, chartered by the Crown. The London Company was chartered April 10, 1606. It was composed of London merchants and was chartered for the purpose of establishing a colony at some point between the 34th and 41st degrees of latitude, or between the southern boundary of the present North Carolina and the Hudson River. The Plymouth Colony, composed of traders and country gentlemen in the West of England, engaged to establish a settlement between the 38th and 45th degrees, or north of the Potomac and South of the Gulf of Saint Lawrence. The English extended to the colonists all the civil and political rights enjoyed in the mother country under Magna Charta, and a colonial government was set up corresponding in every detail to that of England, but fitted to the circumstances of colonial life, and religious freedom was extended to all with the exception of Papists. The colonists were given every encouragement to be independent in government and economy from the homeland and soon proved themselves to be the best colonists in the world.

REASONS FOR ENGLISH EMIGRATION

Having brought the first English colonists safely to Jamestown, let us leave them there for a moment while we examine the reasons for emigration. Elsewhere it has been stated that in the sixteenth century these were four: (1) Spirit of adventurous enterprise, (2) desire for wealth, (3) economic or political discontent, (4) religious sentiment. In addition we should remember another and more or less kindred spirit, that of investigation, which goes hand in hand with adventure and is really a part of it. This spirit was evidenced in religion, philosophy, and the arts. There were now great trading centers; skill in navigation had been increased, a merchant marine had been developed and "it was an age of universal freebooting." The popular imagination was excited by traders' stories of India, China, and Japan.

Thwaite in Epochs of American History, Volume I, page 65, gives the reasons for final English Emigration, which is quoted verbatim:

"By the beginning of the seventeenth century it was quite evident to thoughtful men that England needed room for growth. The population of the island had greatly increased during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The extension of the wool trade had encouraged the turning of vast tracts of tillable ground into sheep pastures, which elbowed large communities of farm laborers out of their calling. England at large waxed great, the condition of the upper classes was improved, but the peasant remained where he was, the gulf widening between him and those above him. The growth of the merchant class and their appearance on the scene as large landholders, still further lessened the feudal sympathy between peasant and landlord. The land abounded with idle men.

"Everywhere was noticed the uneasiness which frets a people too closely packed to find ready subsistence. Starvation induced lawlessness. Colonization was thought by many to be the only means of obtaining permanent relief, from the pressing political and economic dangers of pauperism, and naturally America from which Goswold, Pring, and Weymouth had but recently brought favorable reports, was deemed most available for the planting of English communities."

AFTER JAMESTOWN — OTHER COLONIES

It has been shown that the motive behind the Jamestown expedition, so far as the promoters were concerned, primarily was trade, not religion. So far as the settlers were concerned it was a dream of adventure and gold. Most of the party were "gentlemen" to whom the very thought of labor would have been intolerable, abhorrent.

The stage was now set for colonization. Jamestown was the prologue. The British Lion was aroused from apparent lethargy. Stirring events were to follow in this era of settlement, building, exploration, expansion, trading, warring and growth. A golden age of British sea power and colonial expansion was being ushered in. Let us take a quick look at some of the developments elsewhere and hasten back to Virginia and Maryland, where a young colonist will be stamping his foot in our ante-room, impatient to be introduced.

It was an exceptionally mild winter when the historic band of Pilgrims landed on what has always been described as "the bleak New England coast" at "a spot fit for situation," on December 22, 1620, after lying off of Cape Cod well over a month, spent in seeking out such a spot up and down the coast, and making a selection. The colony was composed of intelligent, brave, sturdy and energetic men, and immediately organized for defense and survival. The Province of Massachusetts was organized in 1630; (37) Connecticut in 1633; (37) the Pequod Indians warred against the settlers on the Connecticut River above Hartford, and at Saybrook, established in 1635, and were crushed in 1637. (37) Roger Williams, a Baptist, with five followers made a settlement at Providence, on Narragansett Bay, in 1636, having been driven out of Massachusetts as a dangerous reformer, and Anne Hutchinson, also expelled from the province because of her so-called "heretical" opinions, with her followers settled (1637-8) on Aquedneck, after Rhode Island, and the settlement was eventually known as Portsmouth. In 1639 Newport was founded by fifty nine dissenters from Mrs. Hutchinson's followers, but the two towns were reunited in 1640 under the name of Rhode Island, and Coddington was made governor. (31)

Meanwhile, in 1622, while Virginia colonists were being massacred at Hog Island near Jamestown, Sir Fernando Gorges, governor of Plymouth in England, with John Mason, strong friends of King James, obtained a grant of the territory lying between the Kennebec and Merrimac Rivers. Gorges sent Maverick to settle on Noddle's Island; Blackstone to the Boston peninsula. In 1629 Mason received an individual grant from the Plymouth Council of the territory between the Merrimac and the Piscataqua, now New Hampshire and Gorges the land between the Piscataqua to the Kennebec. The Plymouth Company abandoned its charter in 1639. Mason died shortly after, and settlements in his tract were incorporated into Massachusetts in 1641. Gorges was made Lord Proprietor of Maine in 1639 and given practically supreme authority between the Kennebec and the Piscataqua, and one hundred miles deep inland. Saco was established in 1623. There were about three hundred inhabitants in the Province in 1639, one half of them in Saco, the rest fishermen, hunters and traders in small hamlets along the coast. Gorges never visited Maine, but sent his son, Thomas, to rule in his place. Through neglect of its owner, the province finally was absorbed by Massachusetts in 1658. (39)

David Thomson and three fur traders had settled at Rye, New Hampshire in 1622 under a Plymouth grant; Dover was founded in 1628 by the Hilton brothers, London Puritan fish dealers, and some of Anne Hutchinson's adherents, exiled from Massachusetts formed Exeter and Hampton. In 1630 Neal, a colonizing agent of Mason and Gorges, brought a large party of farmers and fishermen to settle Portsmouth. In 1679 New Hampshire became a royal province. (39)

Down in Virginia the colony of Jamestown was disillusioned as to the holiday treasure hunting character of the enterprise. They were men never acquainted with manual labor before, and there was an excess of work to be done with an acute shortage of labor, until the practical and resolute Captain John Smith issued a decree that "he that will not work shall not eat." (40) Newport arrived in 1609 with supplies and one hundred and twenty more emigrants of the same class, "gentlemen, goldsmiths, and libertines," to increase the troubles of Captain John Smith. The London Company, with no true understanding of the situation, was impatient at his refusal to allow the men to search for fabled gold where there was none and insisted on their clearing the lands and cultivating the fields. He urged upon the Company to send, "carpenters, husbandmen, gardeners, fishermen, blacksmiths, masons, and diggers up of tree roots." To Smith's firmness we owe the survival of Jamestown through its early disasters and the success of the whole English colonization program in America. He left the colony in October 1609, never to return. (40)

In 1610, the London Company, who had met with poor success up to now, succeeded in getting the king to appoint Lord Delaware as governor and captain general of the province, and he was authorized to rule by martial law. This served to establish order and quiet the unruly elements. In 1611 he was succeeded by Sir Thomas Dale who was given broader powers under a new charter in dealing with crime and insubordination. Added to the domain were the Bermudas, sometimes called Somers Islands, after Sir George Somers who touched there in 1609. Governor Dale also was successful in attracting a better class of emigrants to the colony and in bringing the turbulent mobs under military control. The system of communal ownership was changed to individual allotment and the foundations of a prosperous state were laid. Samuel Argale, described as "a sea captain of piratical tastes," succeeded Dale as governor in 1617, but was recalled in 1618 on complaint by the colonists of his tyrannical and mercenary methods. (41)

The liberals in England, prominent among whom were Sir Edwin Sandys and the Earl of Southampton, had now gained control of the corporation and were fighting the king through the colony (42), to the great benefit of the colony, gaining political privileges never before extended and never after relinquished. (42)

A representative assembly was granted, the first in America, called the House of Burgesses, which met in June 1619 empowered to legislate for the colony. Governor Yeardley, who had arrived in April, and his council had seats and actively participated. (42)

The effect of the Convention, twenty-two burgesses in attendance, was to put quite a curb on the governor's powers which had been absolute, but he was a very wise man and despite many difficulties the colony prospered under his rule. Men came over from England bringing their families and settled, but an unfortunate development at this time was an influx of indentured servants, practically slaves, the London scum and riff-raff and also boys and girls trapped on London streets and brought to Virginia and forced into servitude for long terms. (42)

The year 1619 also marked the beginning of the slave trade in the South. Twenty African slaves were sold in Jamestown from a Dutch man-of-war. (43)

In 1622 Governor Yeardley was succeeded by Sir Francis Wyatt, who brought confirmation of previous concessions made to the colony with assurances and provisions for regular assemblage of the House of Burgesses.

The following year the massacre of three hundred colonists at Hog Island, near Jamestown, by Indians resentful of much maltreatment and many indignities, was a serious blow to the colony, and the charter of the company was voided by the king.

By this time the production of tobacco had become a paramount industry in the colony. 40,000 pounds having been shipped to England in one year. With the annulment of the charter the colonists were placed under the control of the king. Both the king and his son and successor, Charles, reaped considerable profit from the trade. (44)

It was during this period that the first Sewell, Henry, a man of wealth and substance, came to Virginia and established himself on Sewell's Point, the exact date not known, but thought to be before 1632.

During the long struggles between Parliament and king, 1642-1649, the Virginians had sided with the king. There were only a few Puritans in the colony and these were warned to "depart with all convenience." (45) They had come from New England and were engaged in missionary activity which was not appreciated in the conservative atmosphere of Virginia, while the Papists who had settled Maryland in 1634 were not tolerated under any conditions. (45)

A ruckus ensued between the Virginian Clayborne and the Marylanders. Clayborne had a royal license to trade in those parts and had made a settlement on Kent Island in Chesapeake Bay, within the limits claimed by Baltimore. This failure to recognize and respect Baltimore's rights caused him to be forthwith ejected. (45)

In 1635 he returned with a party of rangers and forced the Maryland governor, Calvert, to flee to Virginia, and seized the government himself. However, Calvert received Governor Berkeley's support and Clayborne was soon dislodged. (45)

He was made one of the Roundhead commissioners for the colonies, he made war on the Marylanders again in 1654 and met the Catholics at the mouth of the Severn and again wrested the government from them, and this dispute was not settled until 1657, when a compromise agreement was reached. (45)

The first Virginia governor under the Commonwealth was Richard Bennett who was elected by the burgesses and received his authority from the same source. He was followed by Edward Digges, in 1655, and Samuel Matthews in 1656. (45)

The population of the colony by the influx of Cavaliers after the beheading of Charles I in 1649, increased from fifteen thousand in 1650 to forty thousand in 1670.

The governors quarreled with the burgesses, but differences were amicably adjusted and the colony was quiet during this period, 1652-1660. (45)

1660-1700. Oliver Cromwell died in 1658. His successor, Richard, was accepted in Virginia without question, but upon his abdication in 1659, Berkeley was recalled quickly from private life on his country estate; and the king's party, upon the Restoration in 1660, was again in full control, Clayborne was dismissed from the Secretaryship. (46)

Harsh measures taken against the Dissenters or Puritans by the Royalists, Church of England men; the Navigation Act under which Virginians were allowed to ship their exports to none but English ports, and to import nothing not loaded in English ships, the profligacy of the Church and the gift of the entire province to Lords Arlington and Culpepper, brought on a revolt by the Puritans against the provincial government in 1663, which was not quelled until after the hanging of several leaders. The government became corrupt and despotic, the House of Burgesses was denied the privilege of assembling for many years—the Royalist house elected at the time of the Restoration holding by prorogation. (46)

The general discontent brought on the Bacon rebellion in 1676. Nathaniel Bacon was a popular member of the council, honest, courageous, but indiscreet. The Indians were murdering the settlers on the frontier but Berkeley, interested in the fur trade, would not allow volunteers to go out and get them. Bacon organized a small force but made the mistake of applying to Berkeley for a military commission. The latter refused and declared Bacon and his rangers rebels, and the ensuing four months were troubled times. The colony was torn apart in the throes of a civil war, during which Bacon ran Berkeley out of Jamestown, burning the capital to ashes, "that the rogues should harbor there no more." He died of an undetermined cause in October, 1676. Twenty-three of his adherents were hunted down and hanged and "Berkeley returned to Jamestown to renew his tyrannical rule. Finally, even Charles the King, tiring of his harsh and bloody doings said, 'That old fool has hanged more men in that naked country than I have done for the murder of my father,' and summoned him to England. The colonists celebrated his going with salutes, bonfires, and general rejoicing. His king refused him an audience on his arrival in London and he died in 1677 of a broken heart." (Thwaite). The closing years of the century found Virginia in the midst of difficulties under royal misrule. The tobacco planters rose in rebellion because of the disaster brought on their industry by the attempt to regulate prices and establish ports of shipment. A number of offenders were hung and Culpepper increased his unpopularity thereby. (46)

Thwaite says: "Riots and consequent imprisonments were ordinary events. Nicholson told the gentlemen of the province that he would 'beat them into better manners' or 'bring them to reason with halters about their necks.' The people were discontented, the province grew poorer as each new governor introduced some fresh extortion, immigration practically ceased and the spirit of political independence was torpid." (47)

Delegates were sent to Albany in 1684 to represent the province at a council, now famous, to consider a plan of union for repressing Indian outbreaks. (47)

In 1691, the House of Burgesses sent Blair to England to apply for a patent for a college. The request was granted and the College of William and Mary was chartered in 1693. This was the second university in America. Harvard was the first and Yale (1701) the third. The capital had now been established at Williamsburg and the college was erected there. (47)

French Huguenots under De Richbourg, settling in 1699 on the upper waters of the James, "infused a stream of pure and rich blood into Virginia society." (48)

The population had grown from 143 in 1607 to about 100,000 in 1697; a prosperous agriculture had been developed and the dream of popular government had been realized. (48)

This latter was partly achieved when during Governor Nicholson's term (1698-1705) the Assembly gained control of the financial machinery, by making the treasurer an officer named by it. The burgesses refused to vote sums for public defense until the governors surrendered their prerogatives and fees for land titles. (49)

This was Virginia at the close of the seventeenth century.

CONCLUSION

1289674

The years 1610-1632 mark the period in which the Sewell family, whose history is here written, had its beginning in Virginia. Henry Sewell, the First, a man of wealth and substance, came over from England, perhaps as early as 1610 or 1620, and established himself on a point of land opposite Elizabeth City and the mouth of the Elizabeth River, which has since been known as Sewell's Point.

He waxed rich in the tobacco trade. There is a record of an account sales from his London factor showing cash receipts to have been £650-19-6 or around $35,000 in the currency of today.

He married Alice Willoughby, daughter of a wealthy and influential neighbor. Thomas Willoughby, who came to Virginia in 1610, was justice of Elizabeth City in 1625; Burgess, 1629-32, and Councillor, 1644-1650.

Henry Sewell was not a communicant of the Church of England, but he was a religious man and a Puritan or Dissenter, as they were called by a great many. By the Court of Elizabeth City, on May 31, 1640, he and one Captain Sibley were authorized to build a church at Sewell's Point.

On August 2, 1640, it is recorded an agreement was made that Captain Thomas Willoughby (also titled Esquire), Captain John Sibley, Mr. Henry Sewell, Mr. Edward Windham, and Mr. William Julian are to bear the expense for themselves and others of the church minister, Mr. Thomas Harrison.

In 1641 the Court directed that the church should be built at Mr. Henry Sewell's Point at the cost and charge of the inhabitants, and chapel of ease at Elizabeth River.

Henry Sewell was elected to the House of Burgesses from Elizabeth City in 1632, and from Lower Norfolk in 1639. His death occurred in 1644, and he was buried in the chancel of the church at Sewell's Point. However, no trace of the church now exists.

Nothing more is known of his wife, but three children survived him, Henry, of whom we shall hear more later on, as the founder of "the Sewells of the Severn" in Maryland; Anne, who married Lemuel, son of Francis Mason, and Henry the younger. Anne was born in 1634 and Henry the younger, in 1639.

After the death of Henry the First, at a Court held the same year, 1644, in Lower Norfolk County, at the home of Ensign Thomas Lambert, February 20th, "The Court doth think it fit, and orders it, Mr. Matthew Phillips, the Administrator of Mr. Henry Sewell, deceased, shall within ten days satisfy and pay to Mr. Thomas Harrison, clerk, one thousand pounds of tobacco, and satisfaction in consideration for the burial and preaching of the sermon of Mr. and Mrs. Sewell, deceased, and for breaking ground in the chancel of the church for the burial of Mr. and Mrs. Sewell." The circumstances of the death of the founders, whether by disease, or by tragedy of some nature, is unknown; we know only what appears from that Court order, that they were dead and buried at the same time, at the same spot and probably in the same grave.

At a court held February 25, 1649, it was ordered with the consent of John Holmes, overseer, with Lemuel Mason and Anne, his wife, daughter of the deceased Henry Sewell, witnesses, that the estate of Matthew Phillips, late deceased, be responsible to the estate of Henry Sewell, and Mrs. Ann Phillips, administrator of said Matthew Phillips, responsibility, to be left to the decision of four disinterested persons.

Henry Sewell, the younger, then aged 10, to be sent abroad by orders of the Court, for seven years, in charge of his kinsman, Mr. Thomas Lee. A deposition taken in 1639 shows Henry the younger to have been born in 1639 and a deposition taken in 1672, shows Henry Sewell, deceased sin prde.

(It was an English custom at this time, in some families to give the same name to more than one child, hence, Henry Senior; Henry the Elder; and Henry the Younger, were father, elder and younger sons of the same family.)

The Original Settlers of Maryland — Information Source Cited

It will be necessary for the reader to acquire a knowledge of the times that existed before all the migration into the colony can be understood. Even then we can only draw our own conclusions by imagining what, under the circumstances, you and I would have done.

It is not an uncommon thing for old people to ride hobbies and to attach importance to matters which are regarded as insignificant by others, and it is very common for family history searchers to make the most absurd blunders in finding relationships which do not exist; for that one reason I strongly recommend that those interested in Maryland genealogy read first the Maryland Calendar of Wills.

It is necessary in the study of these Wills to remember that no part of Virginia was settled except a small region on the Eastern slope; that no part of Maryland had been occupied beyond Baltimore and that only a few people were scattered over the seaboard counties of North Carolina, and that it was three generations after the dates covered by these Wills before our names appeared in Georgia, and that they then came from North Carolina, or a few new counties on the borders of Virginia.

Maryland passed, like Virginia and the other southern states, except Georgia, into the hands of large land owners, who by choice of owners took up large bodies of the best land, forcing all the landless to go to other new countries, and thus it was that the descendants of these first Marylanders, in large numbers, and the ancestors of many Georgians, came from North and South Carolina to the "up country" of Georgia. These Wills cover the period from 1660 to 1737 and some justification for ancestry can be read into them. It will be anybody's battle from then on.

THE SETTLEMENT OF MARYLAND 1632 - 1635

George Calvert, Lord Baltimore, one of the members of the London Company and a councillor in the Plymouth Company, was intensely interested in the English colonization plans. Although a staunch Roman Catholic, from 1618 to 1625 he was principal secretary of state to His Majesty, James I.

His intimate knowledge and observation of colonial government in Virginia had convinced him that a strictly commercial colony was always doomed to failure due to a division of interests in the administration and selfish aims of non-resident stockholders. He made attempts in 1621 to establish a colony under the proprietary patent in Newfoundland, but this failed on account of the inhospitable character of the Protestant welcome to his forty Catholic colonists. That is to say, he met with a "cold shoulder" in both places.

Undaunted, he secured a charter from King Charles I for a tract of land north of the Potomac River, bounded on the north by the 40th parallel of latitude, the southern boundary of the Plymouth Company's patent; on the west, a line drawn due north from the Potomac River; these lands were in the bounds of Virginia, as specified in 1609 but had not been occupied. At the king's request the country was named Maryland in honor of his queen, Henrietta Maria.

Lord Baltimore died before the charter had passed the seal and was succeeded in his rights and titles by his son Cecil. In the province he was given almost royal powers, the Crown reserving feudal supremacy and requiring a nominal yearly tribute. He had the power to make war or peace, appoint all officers, judges included, rule by martial law, pardon criminals, and confer titles. He was to summon the freemen to assist in law making, laws were to be similar to English laws, but the King's confirmation was not required. It was impossible, under this charter for the Privy Council to check or inaugurate legislation in Maryland. No tax could be levied except by consent of the freemen, and the colonists and proprietor were allowed to settle their relations. (50)

Cecil sent out his brother, Leonard, in 1633, with two hundred colonists, twenty gentlemen and the rest laborers and mechanics and in the following March a settlement was made near the Potomac, which was called Saint Mary's, referred to in the foregoing pages in connection with the trouble with Clayborne of Virginia over the rights on Kent Island. (51)

Many Protestants came over with Baltimore and he appears to have made sincere efforts to maintain religious freedom for all. The Jesuit Missionaries exerted a strong influence in the councils in favor of humane treatment of the Indians, and the natives responded accordingly with good effect on tribal-colonist relations and as the colonists were thrifty and industrious, prosperity and contentment were the inevitable results. (51)

The colonists, however, were liberty conscious, and jealously guarded their political rights as freemen, and when, in 1638, a code of laws concocted by the proprietor was submitted by the proprietor, it was unacceptable to the assembly which gave it a quick death by veto and a deadlock was the result. A compromise made in mutual good feeling was made and a representative House of Burgesses came into being, with a provision made that individual freemen might appear therein. A poll tax was levied which went to Baltimore, but the freemen retained the rights of self-taxation and law-making. It was a novel experiment that allowed both freemen and their representatives to sit in the general assembly and after 1647, the duplication of representation was dropped and it was wholly representative, and three years later, in 1650, the assembly was divided into two houses, the lower chamber consisting of the burgesses, and the upper of the councillors and others summoned especially by the proprietor. (51)

In the period between 1642-1660 there was much confusion and not a little disturbance in the colony caused by the revolution in England. There was much dissension due to Clayborne's introduction of Protestant colonists on Kent Island. A Parliament ship seized by Deputy-Governor Brent caused popular disturbances. The intrepid and determined Clayborne came over "with force from Virginia and seized the government at Saint Mary's. Governor Calvert fled to Virginia where Governor Berkeley gave him asylum until he could gather a sufficient force to march back and dislodge the usurper." (52)

Leonard Calvert's death occurred in 1647. Succeeding him in 1648 was William Stone, pro-Parliament and anti-king, but he was sworn by the proprietor to protect Catholics and give them an equal chance with the other settlers. (52)

The Protestant party grew rapidly, and was in favor with the governor and council but was in the minority in the Assembly. In 1649 a Toleration Act was passed prohibiting Sunday games, blasphemy, and abuse of other sects, setting forth this statement in the preamble: (52)

"Whereas the enforcing of the conscience in matters of religion hath frequently fallen out to be of dangerous consequence and the better to preserve mutual love and amity among the inhabitants of the province, no person professing to be a Christian shall be in any ways molested or discountenanced for or in respect of his religion, nor in free exercise thereof." (53)

In 1652 a Parliamentary commission was sent out to reduce the colonies. Stone was removed from the governorship, but his popularity was such that he was soon reappointed. Now, he about-faced and sided with the proprietor, who wished to banish all who refused to take an oath of loyalty to the governor. The governor proclaimed the Puritan leaders as seditionists and ran many out. The Puritans called in Clayborne and in a battle at Providence in 1655 won, and executed several of Stone's followers and confiscated their estates. Stone was sentenced to death but reprieved. Cromwell's party was now in full power. Clayborne renewed his claim to Kent Island, but it was never accorded recognition. (53)

In 1657 Baltimore was restored to the proprietorship, the Assembly accepted the situation, an Indemnity Act was passed, the right of the colonists to self-government re-affirmed, a policy of toleration again adopted. The proprietor's restoration was to give greater political privileges to the people, to establish toleration in place of Catholic supremacy in Maryland. (53)

Not much more need be said of Maryland in the seventeenth century. From 1661 to 1675 the colony prospered under Charles Calvert, eldest son of Lord Baltimore, and there was a considerable immigration of Quakers and foreigners, Maryland having become known as a haven for the persecuted of all lands. (54)

By the death of Cecil, Lord Baltimore, in 1657, Charles fell heir to the family title and estates. Thomas Notly was sent out as deputy governor. (54)

The new proprietor secured the passage of a new suffrage act in 1681 which limited the suffrage to those having freeholds of fifty acres or other property worth forty pounds. (54)

There was popular uneasiness over this and also over the Maryland Grant to William Penn; the Navigation Act, which was oppressive and causing resentment in the other colonies as well, and the Protestants now mostly Anglicans, denounced the Toleration Act as impious. (54)

Uneasiness and resentment ripened into a revolt, headed by Josias Fendall, an unworthy demagogue, and Rev. John Coode, a retired clergyman. The revolt was short-lived but Coode again in 1688 headed another under Protestant auspices. In 1689 the government was seized on the pretext that they were upholding the cause of William and Mary. A novel situation—a body of Protestants in those times, upholding the cause of their Catholic Majesties! The king seemed to be taken in for a while, but in 1691 Maryland was made a royal province and

Sir Lionel Copley the royal governor. Baltimore's interests were respected but after this he was only an absentee landlord. (54)

The capital was removed from Saint Mary's, the center of Catholic interest, to Annapolis. Maryland's prosperity, once unrivalled in the colonies, now lagged and for some years the royal administration pursued a policy of religious intolerance and persecution and a low political tone.

In 1715 the government changed back to proprietorship. In 1729 the city of Baltimore was founded as a port for convenience of the planters.

MARYLAND

HENRY II OF THE SEVERN

MARYLAND — THE SEWELLS OF THE SEVERN

Having now a fair idea of the situation in all of the colonies established in what might be called "the century of colonization," (1600-1700) let us return to Henry Sewell where we left off. He was making surveys on the Severn in Maryland in 1661. Settling near James Warner, it was only natural that he should fall in love and marry Warner's beautiful daughter, Johanna. The Warners, as before stated, had been prominent members of the church at Sewell's Point and were among the group which was sent to the church at the Severn. Whether to escape to a more tolerant country, or to evangelize, we have no means of knowing. The governor of Virginia and the clergy frowned with disfavor upon any in the colony who were communicants of any other faith than the Church of England.

At any rate, from some cause, there they were, on the Severn in 1661, as the Province of Maryland was just entering upon an era of prosperity under the wise rule of Charles Calvert.

Henry Sewell was of the landed gentry of England, and consequently could boast of a fine cultural and social background. He was a country gentleman with a gentleman's desire for "broad acres," and began to satisfy that desire very shortly after his arrival on the Severn.

In 1680 he was granted a 537 acre tract lying on the north side of the Severn, in Saint Margaret's Westminster Parish, and here he made his home, and called it "Sewell's Increase." In the certificate of George Gate, Deputy Surveyor, it is represented as "Lying on the north side of Ann Arundel River, standing on the East side of a Cove called Sewell's Cove, containing and now laid out for five hundred acres of land more or less, to be held of the Manor of Annarundell."

Seven years before, Henry Sewell had courted and married Johanna Warner, as before stated, a daughter of his good neighbor, James Warner, about February 13, 1672/3. They were blessed with two sons; James Sewell and Henry Sewell, Junior. James Sewell, son and heir, died without issue, and Henry Sewell, Junior, was heir to his brother James.

Johanna or Joanna, as we would spell it, died at the birth of the second son, and Henry married again. His second wife was named Elizabeth. Her maiden name is unknown, but it might have been any one of a dozen family names of the Severn community.

HENRY SEWELL, SENIOR

Children

Wills

The children of Henry Sewell II and Elizabeth were:

1. Philip
2. Joshua
3. Sarah
4. Anne
5. Elizabeth

His last will and testament was made on September 29, 1691. (14) To his son James he devised 1,000 acres of the dwelling plantation, unnamed, and to his son, Henry, 150 acres of the same tract. To his son Philip he devised 150 acres lying between Beare (Beard) and Cabin branches. Joshua, the youngest son, was willed 100 acres of the same tract. To his wife, Elizabeth, he bequeathed personalty, whereas the residue of the personal estate was to be divided equally among his children, Henry, Philip, Joshua, Sarah and Anne. Abraham Childs and John Merritt (Marriott) were appointed executors and guardians of the minor children. The will was not probated until December 5, 1700. John Farthing and Robert Hinwood, witnesses. Although Abraham Childs and John Marriott were named by the testator as executors, letters of administration were issued to his son and heir, James Sewell, who filed an account with the court on November 25, 1702. (15) He accounted for 924 pounds of tobacco paid to Thomas Reynolds, the High Sheriff of the County and the personal property valued at 1,600 pounds of tobacco, "delivered to John Young, being a legacy to his wife from ye deceased." The inventory of the personal estate had been taken on December 30, 1700 by Thomas Brown and Samuel Dryer and had been appraised at £ 49-12.

By subsequent deeds it is proved that the seat of Henry Sewell, Sr., was on "Henry's Increase," the 587 acre tract which Charles, Lord Baltimore had granted him in 1680, lying north of the Severn River in Saint Margaret's Westminster Parish. Because of this grant by the Catholic proprietors, the Sewells are not to be thought to be Catholics, for they were Puritans, this branch of the family, and perhaps remained Dissenters years after Puritanism in the province had declined. Only three entries are found in the parish register, the earliest being a baptism in 1728. (17)

On March 9, 1702/3, James Sewell of Anne Arundel County and Rebecca, his wife, conveyed to Amos Garrett of the County Merchant for £ 100, one hundred acres of "Henry's Increase," whereas Charles, Lord Baltimore, did "grant to Henry Sewell, Gent. late of Anne Arundel County, on the 23rd of September 1680, the father to the said James Sewell, a tract of land known by the name of Henry's Increase lying and being on the north side of Anne Arundel River now called Severn, and whereas Henry Sewell by his last will and testament did on the 29th of September 1691 bequeath to the said James Sewell, his eldest son and heir-at-law one hundred acres out of the five hundred acres, James Sewell and Rebecca his wife" deeded their inheritance to the above mentioned Amos Garrett. Both James Sewell and Rebecca Sewell made their mark in the shape of a large † before John Baldwin and Samuel Chambers, two Justices of the Peace for Anne Arundel County." (18)

On March 13, 1702/3 Henry Sewell of Anne Arundel County and Mary, his wife and James Sewell "eldest brother" to the said Henry Sewell, and Rebecca, his wife, deeded 150 acres to Amos Garrett, citing virtually the same statements as in the above deed of conveyance, except the tract was referred to as "Sewell's Increase," rather than "Henry's Increase." (19)

On March 14, 1703/4 James Sewell, of Anne Arundel County, Planter, conveyed to Joshua Sewell of the same county, Planter, for the consideration of natural affections and brotherly love which he had for his brother Joshua Sewell, "and also to fulfill and comply with my father, Henry Sewell's last will and testament" land on Indian Branch at the head of the Severn containing 100. acres, being part of "Sewell's Increase." (20) On the same day, and under the same conditions, James Sewell, conveyed to his brother, Philip, 150 acres of land, being part of "Sewell's Increase" at the head of the Severn between Bare and Indian Branches. (21)

Before the conveyances of "Sewell's Increase" and "Henry's Increase" James Sewell on February 5, 1700/1 deeded to Philip Howard, the younger, "Whereas Cecilius, Lord Baron of Baltimore and Avalon, did grant letters patent, issued on June 20, 1668, unto James Warner, late of Anne Arundel County, deceased, 'Warner's Neck' of 320 acres which the said James (Warner) in his life time made over 100 acres to Philip the Elder, and 100 acres to Samuel Howard, and by his last will and testament devised the remaining 120 acres to Elizabeth, his wife, during life and after her decease to Johanna Sewell, daughter and sole heiress, whose son and heir James Sewell is, "now James Sewell, for £ 110 conveyed "Warner's Neck" with dwelling, etc.

JAMES WARNER

Will

Estate

The last will and testament of James Warner, father-in-law to Henry Sewell (Senior) was dated February 13, 1672/3 and admitted to probate in Anne Arundel County on May 25, 1673, by the oaths of Abraham Child and John Jacob. (4) He devised (to) his wife Elizabeth, his entire estate, real and personal during life and at her death to his daughter, Johanna Sewell. He named his wife the executrix, and by a codicil he bequeathed "unto my sonne Henry Sewell a cloathe suite that I now weere and unto Abraham Child a clothe coat." (5)

The administration of the estate was the subject of some controversy and it was not until May 3, 1674, that a commission was issued by the Prerogative Court to appraise the estate, as shown by the following: (6)

"Elizabeth, the widow of James Warner late of Anne Arundel County, deceased, exhibited his last will and testament and requested that commission be issued to Thomas Marsh of the County to prove the said will and that Howard and Richard Hill be appointed to appraise the estate."

At a session of the Prerogative Court held in November 1674, the following was entered: (7)

"Appeared Henry Sewell of Anne Arundel County upon Citation of this Court, issued to Elizabeth Warner and Johanna Sewell and the witnesses to the will of James Warner, deceased, the said Sewell requesting to have the said Will solemnly proved but in regard the said Elizabeth appeared not, time is given the said Henry till tomorrow, nine of the clock in the morning, to exhibit his Libell."

The minutes of the Court for January 8, 1674/5 show the following: (8)

"Came Henry Sewell of Anne Arundell County, who married Johanna Sewell, the sole daughter and heiress of James Warner, late of said County, deceased, and exhibited a Returne made by Nathaniel Heathcote of the said County, Gent., of a commission to him directed thereby empowering him to call before him Elizabeth Warner, the widow of the said deceased and executrix in his will, named at a day and place by him appointed and unto her to administer the oath of executrix according to the forme thereunto annexed and to the tenour of the act of the right of Henry Sewell.”

Nathaniel Heathcote represented “that Elizabeth Warner refused to take the oath as executrix and that it was ordered that all singular goods and Chattels Rights and Credits be granted to the next of kin, to be Johanna Sewell, sole daughter and heiress of the said deceased and inasmuch as the said Johanna was unable to travel said Nathaniel Heathcote was authorized to give her the oath.”

Shortly afterwards Nathaniel Heathcote “represented a bond by him taken of Johanna Sewell, with William Hopkins and John Beaman, of Anne Arundel County as her sureties, dated February 24, 1674/50.” (9)

The Judge, however, stated that inasmuch as “the said Johanna Sewell was a femme covert” the bond was “ill taken” and ordered her husband, Henry Sewell to secure two sureties for the administration of the estate. It was furthermore shown that the debts of James Warner had been paid and that the goods belonging to the deceased had been divided between Elizabeth Warner, “the widow, and Johanna, the daughter of the said James Warner, deceased.” The Judge refused to accept the distribution and therefore ordered Thomas Taillor to deduct the funeral charges and the costs of administration and then divide the residuary in three equal parts—one portion to be given to Johanna Sewell, the administratrix, one portion to Elizabeth Warner, being her widow’s thirds and the remaining portion to Elizabeth Warner during her life.”

In 1675 Thomas Taylor reported to the Prerogative Court that the division of the estate had been made and that “Henry Sewell and Joanna his wife, for theyr share had received the same.”

Henry Sewell and his wife, in a very formal signed document, stated in court in the presence of William Burgess and Nathaniel Heathcote that they had received their share of the estate and agreed to the distribution. Henry Sewell made his signature boldly as Henry Sewell, while Johanna, his wife made her mark thusly: X1 (12)

HENRY SEWELL II

Henry Sewell, second son of Henry Sewell, Gent., and Johanna Warner his wife, was born at "Henry's Increase," Saint Margaret's Westminster Parish, about 1675. By the last will and testament of his father he received 150 acres of "Henry's Increase," which he sold to Amos Garrett on March 13, 1702/3. (1)

On September 8, 1707, he bought of Richard Shipley and Adam Shipley, of Baltimore County, for £ 40 one hundred acres of "Howard's and Porter's Range," with houses, edifices, gardens, etc., located on a Ridge of the Severn River adjoining the plantation of Philip Howard, deceased. (2)

On September 15, 1722, he and Mary his wife, conveyed to Amos Garrett of Annapolis, Merchant, for £ 19 the tract known as "Sewell's Fancy," which lay above the head of the Severn River and which he, Henry Sewell, had been granted in 1707 by Lord Baltimore, containing 300 acres. Henry Sewell made a large H for his signature, while his wife, Mary, made a large M. (3)

On May 16, 1724, he, styled Planter, of Arundel County, deeded to John Worthington, Merchant for £ 6-16-10 "Duvall's Delight" of 100 acres which he (Henry Sewell) had bought on June 11, 1719, from Charles Carroll of Anne Arundel County for £ 20. The plantation which was improved, lay on the east side of the Patuxent River, beginning at a branch called Rogues Harbor. (4) Mary Sewell, his wife, waived all dower rights.

(We have been running a bit ahead of our story). By March 13, 1702/3 Henry Sewell had married Mary ——— who joined him in the deed when he conveyed "Henry's Increase." She likewise waived dower in 1724 when he conveyed "Duvall's Delight."

The children of Henry II and Mary (Marriott) Sewell were:

1. Samuel
2. Mary
3. Henry
4. Joseph
5. Philip
6. John

By the will of John Marriott, of Anne Arundel County, dated August 17th, Henry Sewell was bequeathed 40 shillings.

During the September session of the Prerogative Court, 1706, Henry Sewell and John Stephens were sureties for Thomas Browne, the excutor of John Browne, late of Arundel County, deceased. (6)

On October 1, 1720, Henry Sewell demised a portion of "Warner's Neck" to Edmund Benson, "the house, land, and premises" for a period of five years, but one Samuel Howard with "force and arms" ejected the said Benson when he entered the land to acquire possession. Benson instituted action in the Provincial Court against Howard, where it was shown at the April Court in 1721 that "Warner's Neck" consisting of a plantation of 320 acres near the Severn River was laid out for James Warner who died lawfully seized thereof. It was further proved that Johannah Sewell was the mother of the lessor and "dyed seized of ye above mentioned premises having issue of her body lawfully begotten, James, her eldest son, and Henry the Lessor, her second son, and furthermore, James Sewell, the heir-at-law to Johannah died without issue and that Henry, her second son, who is now the lessor, survived." The court, however, decided in favor of Samuel Howard and declared Edmund Benson the trespasser. (?)

HENRY SEWELL II — WILL

Henry Sewell negotiated his last will and testament on April 29, 1726, it being probated at Court in Anne Arundel County on May 21, 1726, by Daniel Carter, Peter Porter, and Charles Porter. (8) (Still extant and on file in the Hall of Records, Annapolis. He signed with a large H, sealed with monogram in wax.)

To his sons, Henry, Samuel, Joseph, and Philip, he devised equal portions of "Howard's and Porter's Range," after the death of their mother. The portion already given to his son, John, was to be appraised with the estate. Certain personalty were bequeathed to his son, Samuel and daughter, Mary. All children then living with his wife were to share equally, and at the death of his widow, the residuary estate was to be divided equally among all children. He named his wife and sons, Henry and Samuel, as executors.

The administration bond of the three executors in the amount of £ 400 was dated May 21, 1726 with Peter Porter and John Sewell as the sureties. (9)

INVENTORY

The inventory of the personal effects was returned at Court on January 14, 1726/7 by the executors, Mary Sewell, Henry Sewell and Samuel Sewell. Richard Warfield and Alexander (?) appraised the estate at £ 128/9/11½ and among the items were one small looking glass; parcel of old books; 2 guns; one woman servant, Moriah Wells; and various goods at the plantation of John Sewell. Richard Snowden and John Welch attorney for William Lovell approved as creditors. Other signatories were Emmanuel Marriott and Silvanus Marriott, presumably the next of kin. (10)

On October 26, 1730, an additional inventory was filed by the three executors, at which time Silvanus Marriott and Emmanuel Marriott approved. The appraisement was £ 5/13/7.

On September 2, 1729, Mary Sewell, Henry Sewell, and Samuel Sewell, the executors of Henry Sewell, late of Anne Arundel County, deceased, filed their first account, showing a balance of £ 88 remained.

HENRY SEWELL II — ESTATE

A second account was filed on October 16, 1732, by the three executors, accounting for a balance of £ 93/13/7. Payment of £ 3/9/16 was made to Dr. Richard Hill, who attended the deceased in his last illness. The balance due the widow was £ 66/8/5. (13)

Henry's seat was a portion of "Howard's and Porter's Range" which lay on the south side of the Severn River adjoining the land of John Howard. The tract had been surveyed on February 18, 1665/6 for Cornelius Howard and Peter Porter, for 500 acres. At a rent roll it was shown that Joseph Sewell was seized of 100 acres; William Woodward, 100 acres; Charles Yieldhall, 71; and Edward Baldwin 79 acres. (14)

Henry Sewell, however, failed to devise the plantation to his sons and (to the) heirs of their bodies, and thus at a later date the subject of perpetuity was questioned. The court decided that the heirs shared only a life interest.

After the death of Henry Sewell the question of ownership over "Warner's Neck" was again carried to the Provincial Court by John Sewell, his son and heir-at-law. The following was stated by the judge of the Court: "We find that whereas Henry Sewell was brother and heir-at-law to James Sewell, and also that John Sewell was son and heir-at-law to Henry Sewell made the following devi vis."

It was again shown that the land in dispute was possessed by Elizabeth Warner during her lifetime and at her death to her daughter, Johannah, and at her death to her son and heir, James Sewell. It was furthermore proved that James Sewell, on February 5, 1700/1 for a valuable consideration conveyed his inheritance of "Warner's Neck" to Philip Howard and that Philip Howard was seized of it at the time of his death. Accordingly the land described descended to Samuel Howard and his son and heir, who likewise died seized of it, in 1724, at which time the land in dispute was decreed by the Court to belong to Samuel, Thomas, and John Howard, the infant sons and heirs of the said Samuel Howard. The decision of the Court was made on or about May 21, 1728. (15) (Philip Howard died in 1805. For the genealogical history of the Howard family see "Anne Arundel Gentry"—Newman.)

NOTE: Henry Sewell and Mary his wife had a daughter, Rachel, who was baptized in All Hallow's Parish, June 3, 1722. She was probably the youngest child and died shortly afterwards as she was not mentioned in his last will and testament of 1726. Reference: Register of All Hallow's Parish, Diocesan Library, Baltimore.

Henry Sewell probably married a daughter of John Marriott whose will of 1716 was probated in Anne Arundel County on March 10, 1718/9. The testator did not mention a daughter, Mary, but he did leave Henry Sewell 40 shillings, though no relationship to the legatee was mentioned. It is of particular significance that at both of the inventories of Henry Sewell the next of kin who approved were Silvanus Marriott and Emmanuel Marriott, their being definitely placed as the sons of the aforesaid John Marriott and who were made heirs in his will. It was not infrequent that in-laws signed as kinsmen. In this instance

John Sewell, the son and heir, was bondsman for his mother and two brothers. Joseph, Philip and Mary, the other children of Henry Sewell, were perhaps too young—then again Emmanuel and Silvanus Marriott may have been conveniently present at the appraisal of the personal estate, which accounted for their approval.

SEWELL-MARRIOTT KINSHIP — SAMUEL SEWELL

Although no definite proof has been found to substantiate the marriage of Henry Sewell, and Mary, the daughter of John Marriott, the inference is mighty strong and the two Marriotts being kinsmen offers a sort of semi-proof. The last will and testament of John Marriott names the following children: Joseph, Emmanuel, John, Augustine, Silvanus, Mrs. Anne Gambrell, and Sarah Marriott. No wife mentioned. Reference: Wills, Liber 15, folio 1, Hall of Records, Annapolis.

Samuel Sewell was undoubtedly the third son of Henry and Mary Sewell. John Sewell was established as the son and heir at the court action over "Warner's Neck." The name of Henry preceded that of Samuel in the will of their father, and always on the records of the Prerogative Court during the administration of the estate, thus offering conclusions that Samuel was the third born son.

Samuel Sewell was certainly a minor in one sense at the death of his father, but of sufficient age to be joint executor of the estate with his mother and brother. Usually it is assumed that an executor in the early days had at least attained his sixteenth birthday, but then there has been evidence to indicate that an executor was sometimes younger, particularly when an older and more mature person shared in the administration. (Tradition has it that Samuel was born in 1715.)

His inheritance was only 25 acres of "Howard's and Porter's Range," which later developed to be only a life interest. He was still in Maryland on October 16, 1732, when he and the other executors rendered the final administration account upon the estate of their father.

While the four brothers—Henry, Samuel, Joseph and Philip—possessed 100 acres of "Howard and Porter's Range" in accordance with the will of their father. Joseph and Philip were the only sons who maintained the tract and remitted quit rents to the Lord Proprietary, according to the debt books extant of the colonial period. (1)

Henry Sewell 3rd does not appear in the records after the final settlement of his father's estate during the colonial period. Samuel Sewell likewise is not found on the records until the year 1775, when he apparently returned to Maryland to settle his interest in "Howard's and Porter's Range."

"In some manner not known, Matthias Hammond of Anne Arundel County Gent., became possessed of 'Howard's and Porter's Range' as stated in a deed of conveyances: 'Whereas Matthias Hammond by proper conveyances hath become legally seised of the Right of Reversion—except Samuel and Joseph Sewell's undivided part.' " (2) (Quote from Anne Arundel County Deeds, Liber IB, No. 5, folio 232.)

Accordingly on April 1, 1775, Matthias Hammond of Anne Arundel County, Gent., conveyed to Samuel Sewell and Joseph Sewell, "for divers good causes and consideration of 5 shillings, for and during their natural lives," certain portions of "Howard's and Porter's Range." (3)

Immediately, however, the indenture being dated the same day, Samuel Sewell and Joseph Sewell conveyed to Matthias Hammond their interest, the deed stating "Whereas Henry Sewell, deceased, father to the said Samuel Sewell and Joseph Sewell by his last will and testament in writing and recorded . . . among other things devised unto his sons, Henry, Samuel, Joseph, and Philip 100 acres of Howard's and Porter's Range to be divided equally among them without mentioning their heirs and other wards of Perpetuity, whereby they, the said Henry, Samuel, Joseph, and Philip, became each of them only entitled to a life interest of, in and to, 25 acres and whereas Matthias Hammond by proper conveyance hath become legally seised of the Right of Reversion . . . except Samuel and Joseph's undivided parts aforesaid, and whereas the said Joseph and Samuel Sewell being desirous of having their parts amounting to 25 acres. . . . Consequently Samuel Sewell and Joseph Sewell conveyed their interest in the presence of Launcelot Warfield. (4)"

Samuel Sewell, who went to North Carolina, is therefore placed as the third son of Henry Sewell and Mary his wife, but who returned to Maryland in 1775 to settle his inheritance. He apparently married in his thirties and his wife could have been a Maryland woman, though no proof has been found.

While names are not conclusive proof, there is a son, Henry, namesake of Samuel's father, and also Joseph, the name of a brother. Joshua is likewise found among his children, and it is recalled that Samuel had an uncle Joshua.

But the name of Greenberry definitely establishes this family as of Maryland origin. Colonel Nicholas Greenberry, 1627-1697, championed the liberal cause in Anne Arundel County during 1689, when the liberals overthrew the government of Lord Baltimore. Colonel Greenberry was likewise Acting Governor of the Province when as President of the Council he acted in that capacity in 1693 at the death of Sir Lionel Copley and until a new Royal Governor was appointed.

Colonel Greenberry became a patron-saint of the liberal families in Anne Arundel County and many families of liberal political tendencies named their children after him. It thus became a popular name and many families where this name is found carried it regardless of whether or not they were of Greenberry blood.

It has been shown previously that Samuel Sewell did not remit quit rents between the years 1753-1774 in Anne Arundel County, which is sufficient evidence to prove that he was not a Maryland landed proprietor during those years. Of the extant 1775 census taken in Anne Arundel County Samuel Sewell is not listed as one of the inhabitants.

Samuel Sewell did not subscribe to the Oath of Fidelity and Allegiance to the State of Maryland in Anne Arundel County during 1778, required by law of all males above the age of 16 years. The penalty was triple taxation and his name has not been found among those of the non-jurors. He was not the head of a family in Maryland during 1790 according to the First Federal Census. The only Samuel Sewell who was so listed in that census was domiciled in Queen Anne's County and he is proved definitely as a descendant of Henry Sewell, one time Secretary of State of the Province. Furthermore, no administration of an estate belonging to Samuel Sewell, deceased, was made in Anne Arundel County which can be identified as the estate of Samuel and Henry.

All of the foregoing factors, visible and invisible, tended to prove that Samuel Sewell, who went South and died during 1791 was none other than Samuel Sewell, the son of Henry Sewell, Jr., and Mary his wife, and that the plantation known as "Howard's and Porter's Range" which lay on the south side of the Severn River in Saint Anne's Parish, was his until his removal.

The foregoing pages constitute almost a verbatim copy of the report made by Mr. Harry Wright Newman, distinguished genealogist of Washington, D. C., after an exhaustive search made into the Sewell family history. Mr. Warfield's account in his interesting book, "The Founders of Anne Arundel and Howard Counties," agrees substantially with Mr. Newman's findings and in addition has some items not included in the scope of Mr. Newman's investigation. On the other hand, Mr. Newman has given some invaluable items that found no place in Mr. Warfield's book. For the reader's information, pleasure and profit, we now quote from "The Founders of Anne Arundel and Howard Counties.

THE SEWELLS OF VIRGINIA

Henry Sewell came to Virginia from England previous to 1632. He gave his name to 'Sewell's Point' at the entrance to Elizabeth River, opposite to Fortress Monroe. His wife was Alice Willoughby, daughter of Thomas Willoughby, who came to Virginia in 1610 and was Justice of Elizabeth City, 1628; Burgess, 1629-32, and Councillor, 1644-50. At the court holden May 31, 1640, Henry Sewell and Captain Sibley were authorized to build a church at Mr. Sewell's Point. August 2nd, 1640 Captain Thomas Willoughby, Esquire, Captain John Sibley, Mr. Henry Sewell, Mr. Edward Windham and Mr. William Julian, are to pay for themselves and others; the church minister, Mr. Thomas Harrison.

Peter Porter's name appears in 1641. He in 1650 settled in Maryland at the head of Severn River, 'Peter Porter's Ridge.'

In 1641, the order of the Court stated that this parish church should be built at Mr. Henry Sewell's Point, at the cost and charge of the inhabitants, and chapel of ease at Elizabeth River.

Henry Sewell had two children, Anne and Henry. Anne was born in 1634 and married Lemuel Mason, son of Francis Mason. Henry Sewell, the Younger, was born 1639. Henry Sewell, the elder, was elected to the House of Burgesses from Elizabeth City in 1632 and from Lower Norfolk County in 1639. He died in 1644, and at a court holden same year in Lower Norfolk County, at the house of Ensign Thomas Lambert, February 20th, 'the Court doth think fit and orders it, Mr. Matthew Phillips, the administrator of Mr. Henry Sewell's estate, deceased, shall within ten days satisfy and pay to Mr. Thomas Harrison, clerk, one thousand pounds of tobacco, and satisfaction in consideration for the burial and preaching of the funeral sermon of Mr. and Mrs. Sewell, deceased, and for breaking ground in the chancel of the church for the burial of Mr. and Mrs. Sewell.'

Mr. James Warner was elected in 1649, Church Warden of Sewell's Point, and in 1651, settled on the Severn River, Maryland.

At a court holden February 25, 1649, the opinion is concerning the estate of Henry Sewell, with the consent of John Holmes, overseer, with Lemuel Mason and Anne, daughter of Henry Sewell, witnesses, agreed the estate of Mr. Matthew Phillips, late deceased, be responsible for the estate of Henry Sewell, and Mrs. Ann Phillips, administratrix of said Matthew Phillips, responsibility to be left to four disinterested persons. Henry Sewell, the younger then ten years old, to be sent abroad by order of the court for seven years, in charge of his kinsman, Mr. Thomas Lee. A deposition taken in 1662, shows Henry Sewell, the younger to have been born 1639, and a deposition taken in 1672, shows Henry Sewell, the younger, deceased sine prod.

The custom in England at this time, of giving the same Christian name to two or more sons was not uncommon, for instance, Henry the elder, Henry the younger, and Henry the middle. The Maryland settler was evidently of this family.

There were quite a number of people in the vicinity of Sewell's Point about 1650, who came up to Maryland and settled on or near the Severn River. Among them, Edward Lloyd, Cornelius Lloyd, Matthew Howard, Thomas Todd, William Crouch, James Horner, Nicholas Wyatt, Thomas Howell, Thomas Gott, William Galloway, Peter Porter, James Warner, Richard Acton, and others.

The following is an account sales, in 1638, for Henry Sewell, Sewell's Point, Virginia, from his father in London, England, of tobacco sent over in the ships, America and Alexandria, and for one half of a cargo in a shallop with sassafrass roots, sold in England, and showed the cash receipts to have been £ 650, 19s, 6d.

THE SEWELLS OF THE SEVERN

'Sewell's Point' upon which the Independent Churchmen had built their conventicle in 1638, and upon which the coming Jamestown exhibition will be held, sent to the Severn, along with many others, a descendant of Henry Sewell, the prominent pillar of that church.

'Henry Sewell of the Severn,' made surveys with the Howards in 1662. He settled near James Warner, another member of the Virginia church and later, married his daughter, Johanna.

From a case in Chancery, the following history is established. By James Warner's will, his daughter, Johanna heired 'Warner's Neck.' It was 'not to be disposed of by none of them but his said daughter and her heirs, forever.' It was in the face of that will, later sold by James Sewell, son of Henry and Johanna to Samuel Howard. Henry Sewell, Jr., contested this sale on the plea of entail. The Provincial Court passed upon it, but, after the death of all the original parties, it was carried to the Court of Chancery, which reversed the decision of the Provincial Court."

The rent rolls show that it was handed down by Philip Howard to his widow, and by her next husband, Henry Pinkney, was held in the Howard estate. The will of James Warner names Samuel Howard and Henry Sewell, 'sons.' To the first he left a 'broad cloth cuit,' to the latter, 'a suit of stuffe.'

Henry Sewell, Jr., remained upon the homestead. He took up 'Sewell's Fancy,' and bought a part of 'Duvall's Delight,' upon the Patuxent, from Charles Carroll. In his will of 1726, he named Mary, his wife, and Samuel, Mary, Henry, Joseph, Philip, and John Sewell. Having bought of Richard and Ann Shipley, their father's purchase of 'Howard and Porter's Range' this tract was left to his sons. 'Hereford,' the Marriott tract, was also in possession of Henry Sewell, the testator of 1726. This may have come through his wife, Mary, a Marriott. This tract was closed out by the heirs to their brother, John Sewell.

John married Hannah Carroll, daughter of Daniel Carroll, at St. Anne's, Annapolis, May 30th, 1721. Hannah and Daniel Carroll of Daniel were baptized at St. Ann's March 2nd, 1713. John and Hannah (Carroll) Sewell had John, born 1725, and Henry, 1723, and were baptized at 'All Hallows,' July 4, 1726.

John, of John and Hannah Sewell, married Mary Marriott, daughter of Augustine and Mary (Warfield) Marriott, 1729. Issues: John, born 1761, Achsah, 1768, Augustine, Sarah and Mary Sewell.

John Sewell, son of John and Mary (Marriott) Sewell, married Lydia Baldwin, in 1804, daughter of James and Sallie Rawlings Baldwin. Issue: John, Sarah, Matilda, Eliza and Mary Sewell.

John, of John and Lydia Sewell, married Juliet Gambrill, daughter of Augustine and Maria (Woodward-Baldwin) Gambrill. Issue: Augusta—Rev. W. L. Welch; John died single; Charles—Elizabeth Whitney. Issue: Burnett S. Sewell and Juliet Gambrill Sewell.

Juliet Sewell, daughter of John and Juliet (Gambrill) Sewell, married Summerfield Baldwin. Issue: Charles, Summerfield, Juliet, Dorothy and Willard Baldwin.

Matilda Sewell married George Savage. Issue: George, John, Lydia, and Rev. Riley W. Savage. Sarah Sewell married Benjamin Clark, Mary and Eliza Sewell died single.

Mary Sewell, daughter of John and Mary (Marriott) Sewell, married Patrick Orme, of Montgomery County and left two children—Mary, married a Mr. Newlin and Rebecca, Dr. Perry of Washington, D. C. Mr. Orme married a second time and left three daughters. One married Richard Sewell, another Mr. Bailey and the third, Mr. Landstreet, all of Baltimore City.

Augustine Sewell, of John and Mary (Marriott) Sewell, married Mary Pitts, 1784, daughter of Thomas Pitts, of William. Issue: John Marriott Sewell, a prominent merchant of Baltimore; Mary, Francis Baldwin of James and Edward. Issue: John, James F., Thomas Pitts, Mary Pitts, Susan and Sallie Baldwin.

Juliet Sewell - Thomas Worthington, and left a son, Thomas Worthington. Juliet (Sewell) Worthington married a second time, Augustine Sappington. Issue: Nicholas and Mary Sappington.

Augustine Sewell Jr., died single. George Sewell died, age sixteen. Charles Pitt Sewell died, age six years. Eleanor Sewell, daughter of Augustine and his second wife, Anne, married James Gaskins. Issue: Emily, Stewart, Edward and Thomas Gaskins.

Sarah Sewell, daughter of John and Mary (Marriott) Sewell, married Thomas Pitts, in 1782, of Thomas of William, and brother of Mary Pitts, who married Augustine Sewell. Issue: Achsah and Thomas Pitts.

The Sewells and their allied families were among the very earliest settlers in Maryland and held land where both Annapolis and Baltimore are now located.

The old Sewell homestead near Indian Landing at the head of the Severn River, Anne Arundel County, has been in the possession of the family since 1673, and is still owned by descendants of the Sewells. It was surveyed for John Marriott, in 1673, and in his will, dated 1718, he left it to his sons, John, Silvanus, and Augustine Marriott. Sarah, the daughter of Augustine and Mary (Warfield) Marriott, held it until 1773, when it was transferred to John Sewell and his wife, Mary Marriott, a daughter of Augustine Marriott and sister of Sarah Marriott. In 1791, John Sewell transferred it to his son, John Sewell, and it has been in the family ever since.

The first church built in this section was known as the Cross Roads now Baldwin Memorial; and the members of the Protestant Episcopal and Methodist Episcopal churches worshipped together. The first trustees were John Sewell, Matthias Hammond and Augustine Gambrill.

(This matter was given to the author before its publication in the Sunday 'Sun' and by request is republished.)

Extract from a letter written many years ago by one of the Sewell family:

Our great-grandfather, John Sewell, married Miss Mary Marriott, who was born on the old Marriott estate near the Indian Landing at the head of the Severn River. John Sewell, who died 1805, and his wife, Mary Marriott, who died in 1800, lived to a good old age on the old Sewell homestead, situated on the Annapolis and Baltimore road, about eleven miles distance from Annapolis, and adjoining the Marriott estate.

A sister, Sarah, married William Yieldhall. They had no children and left all their possessions to Thomas Furlong, whom they had reared and educated under peculiar circumstances. And this deed of kindness was never forgotten by our family, so characteristic of the Sewells and their love of hospitality.

Achsah Sewell, daughter of John and Mary (Marriott) Sewell, married Leonard Mallonee, at that time a class leader in the Methodist church; and to give you some ideas of the ways of Methodism at that period, I will relate a little incident. Major Philip Hammond and uncle Leonard were fast friends, both members of the church, but had previously been fond of dancing—passionately so—: and on the occasion of the marriage of one of Major Hammond's family, our uncle-in-law, Leonard Mallonee, being a guest at the wedding, their old passion for dancing overcame them, and they both indulged in that pleasing dissipation, and they were both 'turned' out of the church.

The entire community had worshipped at our great grandfather's house—John Sewell—before there was any church in that vicinity. Bishops Asbury and George, Reverends Henry Smith, Alfred Griffith, Samuel Rozzell, and Joshua Wells preached from the same desk—an heirloom still remaining at the same old homestead of the Sewell family. After our great-grandfather's death, the house was kept open for preaching; the desk occupying the same old place.

The piety and zeal of our great-grandparents won for them the title of 'The Two Christians' throughout the neighborhood.

This old homestead is also sacred to the memory as being the place where the first camp meeting was held on Severn Circuit, called the Baltimore and Severn Camp Meeting, presenting quite a novelty for those times, as the grove was illuminated by lamps brought from the oldest Methodist church in Baltimore. The first church on the Severn, called Cross Roads, adjoined this tract.

Sewell tombstones, at the old Sewell homestead in Anne Arundel County, at the head of the Severn River, near the old Cross Roads Church and Indian Landing:

Wife, Juliet W. Sewell, born 1814, died 1845; Son, John Sewell, born 1838, died 1850, single. Eliza Sewell, born 1815 died June 6, 1873.

Council Proceedings

September, 1681, Archives of Maryland

Sir:— Mr. Edward Dorsey came here last night very late and brought news that the Indians had robbed John Marriott—beaten him and his wife, and turned them out of doors. I design, today being 2nd September, to go up and take ten or twelve men. If you please to give me any further orders, be pleased to direct to Towne, to him who is, Sir, your most humble servant.

Robert Proctor.

September 2nd, 1681. To Captain Thomas Francis, at Road River. Deliver with speed.

September 2nd 1681, Anne Arundel County.

Rt. Honble.—The occasion of my present presumption is to inform your Lordship of a robbery committed by the Sinnequain—Seneca— Indians (as is supposed), on the first day of this instant, at the house of John Marriott at the head of Anne Arundel River, upon the Ridge formerly Peter Porter's. The enclosed was sent to me and the same day being our election day, I had an opportunity to speak with the said John Marriott, which for substance gave me the following narrative, viz.: That nine Indians came to his house, September 1st, inst. in the morning and pressed hard for entrance to his house, which he resisted, taking his gun in hand and standing upon his guard, willing his wife to take the children and make escape to the nearest plantation, which was hindered by more Indians, till then indiscerned, but still appearing more and more, to the quantity of one hundred or thereabouts. They then pressed so sore upon him that into the house they would go; no threat or sign of anger would deter them. Out of which they have carried all that he hath in this world, and killed his hogs, which he says he had thirty in his pen, which troubled his cornfield, some of which they have taken away, others they have killed for pastime and let lye, that of numbers he finds only three or four alive. His cattle he knows not what they have killed for they have all forsaken the plantation. His tobacco, which was hanging in the houses, they have thrown down and spoiled. All of which tendeth to his great loss, and putting the neighboring plantations in great feare, so that there are many of them gathered together for their future safety.

In humble manner, I have truly, though briefly, acquainted your Lordship with the robbery. I humbly crave your pardon for what is remiss, and subscribe myself, your faithful and obedient servant.

Thomas Francis.

Near the old Sewell homestead, at the head of the Severn River, Anne Arundel County, Maryland, which has been in the family about two hundred years, a tragic event transpired, and has often been spoken of in by gone days by the Sewells.

One of the early settlers in this neighborhood started out to hunt, and took his little dog with him. After he had been out some time he heard the Indian war-whoop over the hills, and, in his effort to retrace his steps, he found he could not escape the Indians. He, therefore, took his little dog and climbed up into the hollow of a large tree. As the Indians were passing, the dog barked and the hiding place was discovered, and he was pulled down by the Indians and tied to a stake. And the Indians piled pine lightwood around him and having set fire to it, proceeded to have a war dance and he was burned alive.

Later on, when corn-husking and cider pressing time came, the same Indians came to assist, and the white settlers put in the cider a copious supply of rum, of which the Indians drank freely, and then went into the barn to sleep off the effect.

THE RECORDS OF SAMUEL SEWELL IN BALTIMORE COUNTY are the last records of our ancestor in Maryland, and the trail now leads into North Carolina. We follow the pageant on into the "Old North State."

NORTH CAROLINA

Where the Sewells halted their southward march for a generation, "bought broad acres" — tilled the soil — begat children — who made love — married — waged war — and the Maryland ancestors died and were buried — the sons and daughters moving on into the new country and "promised land" of Georgia.

SOUTH CAROLINA

The French made two unsuccessful efforts to plant colonies in the unoccupied territory stretching from the Saint John's River in Florida, to Jamestown, Virginia. The story of these fruitless efforts you have read in the foregoing pages. The province of "Carolina" was given in 1629, by Charles I, the reigning monarch, to his attorney-general, Sir Robert Heath, who made no use of it. However, the Virginia Assembly seeing the trading advantage, began to issue exploring and trading permits in the southern portion of the province, the common name of which was Carolina, to certain commercial companies, and soon the country was explored and well known. It had been fairly familiar to the adventurous as far as the Chowan, by 1625. (55)

In 1653 a band of dissenters from the English Church, led by Roger Green, planted a colony in Albemarle — at the conjunction of the Chowan and Roanoke; the first permanent settlement in our present North Carolina. (55)

During the next twenty years the number of settlements were increased by many individuals and parties of settlers venturing into the new country and buying land of the Indians. Many Baptists and Quakers moved in from the north, where life had become unbearable for them. (55)

A party of New Englanders is said to have settled in 1660 at the mouth of the Cape Fear River, for the purpose of raising cattle, but incurring the hatred of the Indians they failed in their design and "melted away." A company of several hundred from the Barbados, under Sir John Yeamans, occupied a site in 1664, on the Cape Fear and the district was known as Clarendon. (55)

Charles II was king of England at this time, and parcelled out the land to a group of favorite courtiers, chief ones being the Earl of Clarendon, the Duke of Albemarle, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and Sir William Berkeley, governor of Virginia. But in so doing the king was careful to confirm the private purchases by individuals from the Indians and the proprietaries commanded to recognize and respect these rights. William Drummond, a Scotch colonist was made governor of Albemarle and Sir John Yeamans at Clarendon. (55)

In 1665 the Lords Proprietors were given a new charter, enlarging their boundaries, under which they included all the territory south between Virginia and Florida, now included in the United States, and the "western ocean." The Bahamas were added, claims of Spain and Virginia being disregarded. (56)

Under Governor Stephens who succeeded Drummond at Albemarle, the first legislature met in 1669 and declared that no debts incurred in outside of the province by settlers previous to their removal to Carolina, could be collected in their new home. (56)

This act gave a great impetus to immigration and many new settlers flocked from the Bermudas, Bahamas, New England, and Virginia. Some were very desirable, while others were very poor material. The proprietaries were very liberal in their land grants, and the colony progressed. (57)

However, the settlement at Charlestown, founded in 1670-71 "on the first highland" at the junction of the Ashley and Cooper Rivers, by William Sayle, and that on the Cape Fear being more orderly and promising, the proprietaries showed these two colonies much more consideration. Albemarle struggled along, neglected for a decade, while Cape Fear and Charleston flourished. (57)

The proprietaries were lavish in their aid to the latter. Sayle died the first winter and was succeeded in 1672 by Yeamans as governor. Yeamans was unpopular and was supplanted by Joseph West in 1674. (57)

In 1682 the Clarendon settlements had been mainly settled at Charleston. There was an excellent town government and a population of about three thousand. The fur and timber trades were large, much live stock was raised, tobacco raising was extensive and fish abundant. (57)

In 1679 the French Huguenots began to arrive in great numbers, and a small party of Scotch Presbyterians fleeing religious persecution at home, occupied Port Royal, but very briefly, as the Spaniards from Saint Augustine, jealous of the encroachment and suffering from pirates from Charleston, fell upon the little settlement and wiped it out completely. (57) Could the Scotch Presbyterians succeed where the Huguenots had failed? Apparently they could not.

The Huguenots who settled first in Craven County, were not immediately given any political rights, although favored by the proprietaries — pirates making Charleston headquarters, preyed on Spanish commerce, causing much fear to arise in lordship hearts of a war with Spain; the dissenters were always at war with the English Church; trade restrictions were very unpopular; proprietary interference unsettled the public mind; the colonists were always "apprehensive of a change in government, and in general nursed many grievances, petty and great." (58)

Following West's first term as governor in 1683, for seven years there was a succession of unsatisfactory governors, then Sothel (1690) was driven out as he had been in the northern colony, in 1691, and Philip Ludwell came down from Virginia to be the first governor of the united colonies. He was weak and failed to restore order and public confidence. (58)

It was not until John Archdale, a level headed and conservative Quaker, and one of the proprietaries, came out from London in 1695 as governor that the colonists ceased their bickerings and subsided into a condition of peace and good order. (59)

Joseph Blake, nephew of Archdale, succeeded him as governor in 1696. His rule is described as "benign" and the century closed in the Carolinas on a note of better popular feeling towards the Huguenots, complete religious toleration of all Christians, save Catholics, and a marked increase in general prosperity. (58)

The Carolinas, planted sixty years after Virginia, were still feeble, and it was yet a half century ere they became of prime importance as colonies. (58)

One outstanding achievement had been their successful resistance to efforts of the proprietaries to abolish popular government, the birthright of the Anglo Saxon. (58)

THE FIRST EUROPEAN SETTLERS IN NORTH CAROLINA

(W.L.S.)

"The earliest settlements in North Carolina were made on the Coast and near the mouth of the Cape Fear River. In a map made by John Lawson in 1709 you can see the outlines of these communities. They commence at the mouth of Currituck Inlet and sweep around in a semi-circle, passing Pamlico Sound near the Neuse and then East to where Fayetteville now stands, on to thirty miles north of Cape Fear on the Atlantic. The population was less than 7,000." (Hawks, Volume I)

Twenty years later it had grown to 10,000 which included five small towns, Bath, Newbern, Edenton, Beaufort and Brunswick.

There were five Royal Governors of the State including Matthew Rowan up to 1760 and during this period the population rolled upward and westward, county after county being established in 1753, and this was the period in which my progenitor, Samuel Sewell, Senior, arrived in Rowan County. (Date of his first land grant.)

The earliest settlers in Rowan of which we have any accurate knowledge were made in 1737. Dr. Foote, in his sketches of North Carolina states that the Scotch-Irish began this settlement in the Shenandoah Valley in Virginia during that year and in North Carolina soon after. Some scattered families followed the Trading Path and settled in chosen spots from the Roanoke to the Catawba, as the Indians were friendly, and the caravans of traders were frequent. It would be likely that immigrants would be attracted by the glowing description of the fertile land that lay between the Yadkin and the Catawba Rivers, as it abounded in game and good pasture for their cattle. (See Foote, page 188)

Rumple's History of Rowan County, page 43, states that the Scotch-Irish were the most numerous and the leading people of the settlement. The Old Court House land records show the names of many of these old families, such as Nisbets, Allisons, Brandons, Luckeys, Locks, McCullochs, Cowans, McKenzies, McLaughlins, and many others, too numerous to mention. But along with these Scotch-Irish and settling side by side with them, there came people of other nationality to Rowan. These were the Germans, or the Pennsylvania Dutch, not of Holland extraction, but Germans from the Middle Rhine. These first arrivals took place in 1745, though it was five years later that great crowds of them came. Many arrived after the Revolutionary War. They traveled with their household goods and women and children in wagons, the men and boys walking and driving their cattle and hogs before them. They came side by side with their Scotch-Irish neighbors, sometimes settling in the same communities and at other times occupying separate sections of the country.

Rumple says these people fled their province in Germany after many bloody and atrocious deeds during the reign of Louis XIV, of France. Their first place of refuge was England where Queen Anne later induced as many as possible to become settlers in the American Colonies.

Not long after the Scotch-Irish and Pennsylvania Germans, came into the territory of old Rowan another people that has added much to the wealth of the State: the Moravians, or United Brethren. These people purchased a tract of 98,985 acres called the "Wachovia Tract" in what is now another County, but originally in Rowan! This was in 1753, when only twelve of them arrived from Pennsylvania, and began the settlement. In 1804 the well known Salem Female Academy was founded at which many of the daughters of the South have been educated.

Along with these settlers from Ireland and Germany, came from time to time, others of English, Welsh and Scotch descent, who mingled with the former in working out the destiny of old Rowan, the Mother County.

Although Rowan was not settled by Cavaliers or Huguenots, or by the aristocracy of Old World society, she has good reason to be proud of the early pioneers who laid the foundation of their homes. They were men and women who had suffered for conscience' sake, or who fled from tyranny to seek liberty and happiness, unrestrained by the shackles of a worn out civilization.

THE FIRST COURT

From the records in the County Clerk's office at Salisbury, it appears the first court was held in 1753, only a few months after the Court was established. Justice Walter Carruth was the first judge, followed by many more who served later.

A good part of the first court's time was taken up registering the marks and brands for establishing the owners of live stock and cattle. Constables were appointed whose duties lay as much as a hundred miles from the town. These old Court Records are full of interest to any one who will take the time to read them.

Samuel Baker asked the Court in 1753 to declare his mill on Davidson Creek a public mill and his request was granted. John Baker proved to the Court that his ear had been bitten off in a scrape and not cropped for larceny and obtained a Court certificate to this effect.

In those days innkeepers were told by the Court what prices to charge for food and accommodations and in 1755 the following schedule of prices was decided on:

For dinner of roast or boiled flesh, one shilling

For supper and breakfast, each six pence

For lodging overnight, good bed, two pence

For stabling (24 hours) with good hay and fodder, six pence

For Indian corn or other grain, per quart, two pence.

The above to be paid in Proclamation Money.

In June 1753, the Court decided to select a place for the erection of a Court House, pillory, stocks, and gaol. The action of the Court was as follows: The Court House, gaol, and stocks shall be located where the Irish Settlement forks and near the most convenient spring. The Court directed that the house should be of frame work a story and a half high, with two floors, the lower one raised two feet above the ground. It was to be provided with oval bars, a bench raised three feet above the floor and seat for the Clerk, and "cases" for the attorneys. There was to be three good windows with glass in them.

In 1756 Jacob French obtained a license to keep a village inn and later to run a distillery for the benefit of those whose thirst could not be adequately quenched by the purer and more wholesome waters of his spring.

The Superior Courts were established by Act of General Assembly at Newbern, during the administration of Governor Tryon. The state was divided into six districts which were Wilmington, Newbern, Edenton, Halifax and Salisbury districts. These Courts were presided over by a Chief Justice and two Associates and these were appointed by the Governor. The Chief Justice was to receive six hundred pounds plus fifty pounds for each Court attended.

The village of Salisbury proper was not provided with a Charter until 1778 at which time the General Assembly specified a "Common" in connection with the town. I was told that it is customary for towns in England to have a Common, which is an open tract of public land, similar to our parks, where cattle may graze and where children can play and the townsfolk can gather for special occasions. The Act also provided that the citizens of Salisbury shall have free access to all natural springs within the city limits, whether on private lots or on the Common, and that it was lawful for any one to cut and sell, or use for his own use any tree or trees standing on the Town Common. It did, however, prohibit any person from allowing their hogs, shoats, and pigs from running at large within the city limits of the town, under a penalty of twenty shillings and allowed any person the right to shoot, kill, or destroy them while at large. The law required every household to keep a ladder and two leather buckets on hand at all times as a fire measure. Fast riding or driving was punishable by a fine of five shillings.

RELIGION AND CHURCHES

The early settlers of Rowan County were religious people. (See Rumple) The Presbyterians of Scotch-Irish extraction were the most numerous in the section. The Lutherans and German Reformed, sometimes called Calvinists, held services, also the Church of England. (See Wheeler, page 357) A petition signed by thirty four persons in Rowan County, and addressed to Gov. Dobbs, represents: "That His Majesties most dutiful and loyal subjects in this County, who adhere to the liturgy and profess the doctrines of the Church of England, as by law established, have not the privilege and advantage which the rubric and canons of the Church allow and enjoin on all its members. That the acts of the Assembly calculated for forming a regular vestry in all the counties has never, in this county, produced their happy fruits. That the County of Rowan above all counties in the province, lies under great disadvantage, as her inhabitants are composed of all nations of Europe, and instead of uniformity in doctrine and worship, they have a medley of most of the religious tenets that have lately appeared in the World, who for dread of submitting to the National Church, should a lawful vestry be established, elect such of their own community as evade the Acts of the Assembly and refuse the oath, whence we can never expect the regular enlivening beams of the Gospel to shine upon us."

From the fact that there were only thirty-four signers of this petition from the entire territory of Rowan, one would naturally infer that the people in those days were in total disagreement and yet it was the idea for the rulers in England, and the Assembly to have the Province conform as far as possible to the Mother system at home. And so the parish system of England was incorporated as far as possible into the North Carolina law.

SOCIETY IN NORTH CAROLINA IN 1745

Moore's "History of North Carolina" describes the parish of 1745 with great force by saying, "Life in North Carolina was full of pleasure and profit. The Indians, save those of King Blunt on the Roanoke, were all gone toward the setting sun. The crude cabins of the first settlers had been replaced with frame houses. Hospitality was unbounded, and the weddings and other social gatherings were largely attended. West India Rum and negro fiddlers added charm to the midnight revel. The strict morals of the Puritan and Quakers did not prevail in the coastal towns.

The curled and powdered gentlemen, and the ladies with their big hoops, were never so well pleased as when walking to a minuet or betting at a rubber of whist. Horse racing and fox pursuit were in high favor as pastimes. Very different were conditions in Rowan.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES

Swarms of Cherokee warriors were just beyond the Blue Ridge Mountains and death by the tomahawk was possible at any moment. Long persecutions had stimulated the enthusiasm of the Scotch-Irish by the Mother Church, until religious devotion became the habit of whole communities. The log churches were to them almost what Solomon's Temple had been to Jews. This period existed up to the Revolution. The inhabitants being of the respectable middle class of society, equally removed from the vices of the rich and from the ignorant masses of the shiftless, were generally possessed with the rudiments of An English education. They could read and write and cypher as far as the simple rules of three were concerned.

The German settlers brought their translation of the Bible along with them, together with their hymn book. In those days the old field schools were established and taught by citizens whose knowledge of the letters was somewhat better than the average. They obtained the name "Old Field Schools" because they were frequently built on or near an old field, or near an open piece of ground.

ACADEMIES

But the people were not content with the old field schools, so in 1760 a classical school was established about two miles north of where Davidson College is now located but on the headwaters of Rocky River. Here a number of distinguished men received their education. Among them were Colonel Osborne, who was for a long time clerk of Rowan Superior Court and a leading man in the Rowan Committee of Safety, at the opening of the Revolution; Dr. Samuel McCorkle, the preacher and pastor of the Thyatira Church, founded there in 1758; also a Dr. Ephraim Brevard, "who was the author of the Mecklenburg Declaration of May 20, 1775."

THE REGULATORS

Rumple's History says "Indian war whoops had not died away before another storm was heard over the hills and valleys of Rowan County. This is what is known in the history of North Carolina as the 'War of the Regulation.' It could scarcely be called a war, yet it rated well above a riot. It was the first blind, unorganized rising of the spirit of liberty against the many long spun oppressive acts, for which there was no other remedy.

As a first factor in this problem we have a liberty loving people who came to the wilds of North Carolina for the purpose of escaping from political oppression. Such was the early immigrant settler who gradually worked on South, first Virginia, then Maryland, and now on the Albemarle Sound of North Carolina. The hardy Scotch who came from the Highlands to the banks of the Cape Fear, the Swiss and Palatines on the Neuse and Trent, the Scotch-Irish and the Germans—All these or their fathers, had once felt the weight of the oppressor's iron hand, crushing out their liberties and having once suffered, they were jealous of the approaches of tyranny in their new home.

"As the next factor we have the most contemptible system of government. This misgovernment began with the burdensome Constitution, having in it the germ of a provincial nobility—landgraves. All this was disagreeable and unpleasant to the wild and free spirit of the people."

This same history tells us that such governors as Seth Sothel, George Burrington and Richard Everard were a reproach to humanity and a stench in the nostrils of decency. That Governors Dobbs, Tryon and Josiah Martin enacted the last scenes in the drama of the Royal Government which was calculated to annoy and irritate the people to the point of rebellion. Nor could the prudence of such Governors as Drummond, Archdale, and Johnston counteract the deep seated opposition of the people to the oppressive domineering legislation dictated by the royal cabinet of England and enacted into law by the Colonial Legislature.

The struggle between the Province of North Carolina and its foreign rules began one hundred years before the yoke was thrown off in 1669, when the offensive Navigation Act was forced upon an unwilling people as it strangled the commerce of the infant colony.

The struggle became more serious when the parish laws were enacted which did not allow marriages to be made by ministers not conforming to the doctrines of the Mother Church abroad and taxing the country for support of this religious system which was so distasteful to the great majority of the people. Governor Tryon was not a bigot, but his demands were costly to the people. He secured from his Assembly authority for the erection of a mansion at Newbern to cost 15,000 pounds, equal to $75,000 in this period and more suitable to a prince of royal blood than for a Governor. The palace exceeded in magnificence any structure of that day found on the American continent, and its erection caused a large increase in the taxes.

This same governor required a share of the fees allowed various Crown officers. These officers, taking the cue from the Governor Tryon, doubled and tripled their charges for every act done for the people. The lawyers refused to serve their clients for established fees and thereby closed all avenues directed toward justice for those unable to pay.

In this emergency there arose a person who was capable of bringing on a collision. A Mr. Howell, an old field schoolmaster somewhere on Deep River was author of about forty songs in which he sung, and repeated from plantation to plantation, from Eno to the Yadkin, at every house-raising, log-rolling, corn shucking, wedding and funeral. Through his staunch and unceasing work among the people, lashing out at the extortioners and crown officers in his political songs of mockery until the minds of the people were wrought to a high pitch of excitement and indignation against the Crown officers and the lawyers.

When this influence had worked sufficiently a popular leader arose by the name of Herman Husbands, from Sandy Creek. He possessed great shrewdness of character and by boldly protecting against extortion he won the regards of the multitude. By the influence and under the guidance of this man many were induced to associate themselves together in bands called "The Regulators."

Rowan History: "The first public meeting of Regulators was held at Mad-dock's Mill, October 10, 1766. By this time my sympathies with the Sons of Liberty spread to adjoining counties of Mecklenberg, Anson, Orange and Guilford, which were ready to venture in the same perilous path. Their grievances for relief were carried to the Governor. He promised what they asked and ordered a schedule of all fees to be posted for public inspection, but the officers laughed at the gullibility of the people and went on demanding the same or larger fees. At last a true bill was found against Edmund Fanning, who was Clerk of the Court and son-in-law of Governor Tryon, for extortion in six separate counts. When the trial came Fanning pleaded guilty to each count and was fined six pence and cost.

Such a mockery of justice, under the eyes of Tryon, for he was present at his son-in-law's trial, plainly demonstrated that no relief was to be expected from the Courts. The very foundation of justice was corrupt and brought forth much bribery and oppression. The Regulators were upset and committed several acts of violence and lawlessness upon Fanning and threatened to control the courts by violence and at their suggestion many refused to pay any taxes.

But Governor Tryon was not unmindful of his own interest and immediately installed measures to allay the irritation. One of these measures was a good will journey to the western counties, with a body of troops escorting him.

In July 1768 he marched to Yadkin River and crossing that stream reached Salisbury on the 18th of August. After a brief stay he went to Cabarrus County and then returned to Salisbury to review his militia stationed there, before returning to Newbern. He being a great soldier and of congenial manner, was one reason why Rowan County did not enter more fully into the Regulator struggle.

But while the Governor's good will policy was short lived, there followed a torrent of rebellion that did not avert the final catastrophe. Matters grew worse and worse so that in 1771 he was compelled to leave the mansion the second time with a body of troops to enforce law and to disperse the Regulators.

At Tryon's approach the Regulators were massed near the Great Alamance River, and here the long delayed collision took place. It could not be called a battle for the Regulators were not organized as a Militia force, and had no officers beyond the rank of Captain. Many were unarmed and appeared to be spectators. The rest were armed with hunting pieces, possibly enough ammunition for a day's sport in the woods, so perfectly unprepared were they that the Rev. David Caldwell, who was present, passed back and forth several times, pleading with the men to submit to any conditions they could obtain, or to disperse orderly rather than engage in a hopeless conflict.

These patriots had proved their devotion to the cause of liberty and adhered to the administration of law and in the hands of constituted authority and not condemned as mob and insurrection without cause, but rather led and conducted the General Assembly and the Governor in their effort to enforce the British laws in a free country.

THE INDIAN WARS

Rowan County history records that the Indians had moved back from the lands now occupied by the whites, but continued to stay on the frontier and were frequently seen in the settlements. On record at the Court House at Salisbury there is an account of a visit from a party of Indians in 1756, who were passing through on their way to Catawbass. Their object was to conclude a treaty of peace and they asked that "pass" be granted them and as a token of good will they left a belt or string of "wampum" in the hands of the clerk. But their visit was not of a peaceful nature. A terrible war whoop rang out in the dead of night and families and settlers were slaughtered or carried off as captives beyond the mountains.

Bancroft's beautiful description in his own words, of the Cherokee land follows:

"Their houses were encircled by blue hills rising beyond hills, of which the lofty peaks would kindle the early light, and the overshadowing ridges envelop the valleys like a mass of clouds. There the rocky cliffs, rising in naked grandeur, defy the lightning, and mock the loudest peals of the thunderstorm, there the gentle slopes are covered with magnolias and flowering forest trees, decorated with roving climbers, and ring with the perpetual note of the whippoorwill, there the wholesome water gushes profusely from the earth in transparent springs, snow white cascades glitter on the hillsides and the rivers, shallow, but pleasant to the eye, rush through the narrow vales which the abundant strawberry crimsons, and coppices of rhododendron and flowering azaleas adorn. At the fall of the leaf, the fruit of hickory and chestnut is thickly strewn on the ground. The fertile soil teems with luxuriant herbage on which the roebuck fattens. The breeze is laden with fragrance. Through this lovely region were scattered the villages of the Cherokees."

SAMUEL SEWELL GOES TO NORTH CAROLINA

Samuel Sewell, the third son of Henry Sewell, the Second, of the Severn, was born at the family seat on "Howard's and Porter's Range," on the Severn, Anne Arundel County, Maryland, ca 1715. He was married twice and was the father of thirteen children, eleven sons and two daughters. The children were as follows:

By first wife,

1. Samuel, Junior, b. January 17, 1750
2. Joshua, b. 1755
3. Nicholas
4. Joseph
5. James, b. November 20, 1765
6. Christopher
7. William
8. Henry (died single in Franklin County, Georgia)
9. Comfort, b. 1785

By 2nd wife, Elizabeth:

10. John, b. November 7, 1777
11. Greenberry
12. Moses Terrell
13. Sarah

(Data not given concerning above was not available.)

About 1760 Samuel Sewell moved to Rowan County, North Carolina. It is unfortunate that we have no vital statistics on Nicholas, the third son, but as he was co-defendant with Samuel and Comfort in a suit brought by their cousin, Christopher in Baltimore County, Maryland, over property of Joshua, their uncle, in 1764, it is reasonable to suppose that he was born in Maryland and in his teens went to North Carolina with his father, mother, two brothers and sister Comfort.

Samuel, senior, with his family, located in a splendid section of Rowan County ca 17—, where he and his second wife are buried in a family Baker's cemetery, within sight of the flourishing modern town of Kannapolis, the home of the Cannon Mills, the world's largest manufacturer of towels, sheets, and hosiery.

Samuel's plantation lies on Buffalo Creek, in the direction of Enochville. In the same section are the Baker and Plaster plantations. The two Sewell daughters, Comfort and Sarah were wooed and won by Benjamin Baker and Benjamin Plaster, respectively.

The Sewell men were likewise matrimonially inclined, except Henry.

Samuel, Junior, married Christian White, February 1, 1780 in Rowan Co. Born 1750, died February 18, 1815, buried in Sewell graveyard, Franklin County, Georgia.

Joshua, born 1755, in Maryland, married Jennie Willis, born Ireland, 1785-87, died 1812. Joshua died 1834-37, both buried in Sewell Cemetery, Franklin County, Georgia.

Nicholas, married Miss Lafferty, given name unknown. No dates available. Supposed buried Sewell Cemetery, Franklin County, Georgia.

Joseph, married (1) Esther Long, in North Carolina, October 25, 1790; (2) Elizabeth Stone, February 11, 1809. Prior to 1800 moved to Maury County, Tennessee. Died there. Will proved May 17, 1832.

James, born November 20, 1765, died October 10, 1852. Married Margaret Harris in North Carolina, October 1, 1785 in Meriwether County, Georgia. Died Meriwether County, Georgia, May 20, 1841; both buried at Saint Mark's.

William, married (1) Mrs. Settles; (2) Mrs. Blackwell. Moved to DeKalb County, Georgia. No other data available. Supposed died in DeKalb County.

John, married Mary Richmond, November 5, 1802 in Rowan County, N.C. He was born in Rowan County, 1797. Died July 31, 1862.

Greenberry, married Ann Brasdell, December 29, 1807. Moved to Carroll County from Franklin County. Will January 30, 1846.

Moses Terrell, married Priscilla Brawner, date unknown. He died in Chatooga County, Georgia, buried at or near Summerfield, Georgia.

Henry Sewell, No dates. Died in Franklin County, Georgia.

Comfort and Sarah, See marriage records on following page.

Samuel Sewell, Senior died in Rowan County, 1789 and when the first United States Census was taken in 1790, all of the older children had moved South, where the new land of Georgia beckoned to "a land flowing with milk and honey" and one of surpassing beauty besides, it might be said. Only Joseph, who married that year, prior to the enumeration, remained of the older ones and maintained a household; but the mother, Elizabeth, was still living and had her three sons with her—John, Greenberry, and Moses; and the youngest daughters, Sarah and Mary. In 1800 Elizabeth, with these children, constituted the only Sewell household in Rowan County.

SEWELLS OF NORTH CAROLINA IN 1790

They were represented by nine household heads. In Moore County there were three—John Lewis, Senior; Lewis Junior and Mary. In Sampson County there was one—Thomas. In Wilkes County, two, Joseph and Abraham; and in Rowan County, two—Joseph and Elizabeth.

In 1800 we have information for Rowan, which was as before stated—Elizabeth—three males to 26; one female to 26; one female over 45. In Fayetteville District, Moore County, John Sewell had 4 males under 10; 1 male 16-26 and maintained a household; 1 female under 10, 1 26-45.

Lewis Sewell had 3 males under 10; 2 10-16; females, 1 under 10; 1 10-16; 1 16-26; 1 over 45.

Bihu Sewell, 1 male 16-26; female, 1 16-26.

Lewis Jr., 1 male 26-45; female, 1 to 10; 1 16-26.

Charles Sewell, 3 males 10-16; 1 over 45; females 2-10; 2-45 up.

The Marriage Records of Rowan County, on file at Salisbury, show the following marriages of members, male and female, of the Sewell family:

Samuel Sewell, Jr., married Christian White (spinster), 1 February, 1780. Witnessed Samuel Sewell, Jr., and B. Booth Boote, Rowan County, N.C. (They left Rowan County 178—. His will filed in Franklin County, Georgia, 15 February 1815.)

Joseph Sewell and Esther Long, married 25, October 1790. Witnesses, Nicholas Sewell and C. Caldwell, D.C. Rowan County, N. C.

Benjamin Baker and Comfort Sewell married 8 October, 1779. Witness Samuel Sewell and John Brevard, Rowan County.

Benjamin Plaster and Sarah Sewell, married 10 October, 1802. Witness John Sewell and James McEwen, Rowan County. Benjamin born 1780, died November 25, 1836, buried in DeKalb County, Georgia.

Joseph Long and Mary Sewell, married 6 June, 1793. Witness, John Plaster and Ad Osborne, Rowan County. John was born 11, July 1777, died August 24, 1864. Mary born April 12, 1795, died July 27, 1800. Both buried in Sewell Cemetery, in Eastern Banks County, Stone's throw of Anglin.

(No Sewells in Mecklenberg or Montgomery Counties.)

SEWELLS FROM ROWAN IN THE REVOLUTION

Cleveland, N. C.
June 15, 1949

Dear Mr. Sewell:

Your letter in regard to Sewell research rec'd and in reply I do not make a preliminary search. I do happen to know that the Sewells were in Rowan Co. at an early date.

My fee for this search will be $20.00 and a search means this, Colonial records, deeds, marriages, old tax books, (and we have them from 1753 to date) very old court minutes, and they reveal much of the activities of the pioneers, Roster of the Revolutionary Soldiers, a few settlements of estates, some cemetery records, etc.

If you decide to have the search made, I will appreciate the fee in advance as I live some distance from Salisbury and there is some expense attached.

This will take several days as some of our works are not indexed and that means turning page by page.

Yours truly

My dear Mr. Sewell:

I have finished your work with the exception of old court minutes. Have located Samuel Sewell's land, but quite strange to say it has never been recorded in Rowan County, he had the land, for the deeds, I am sending you, verifies the fact, these are the only deeds here. His land was near Cabarrus County line, but in Rowan County. Cabarrus Co. was formed from Mecklenberg Co. N. C. in 1792.

It is strange that only two deeds of Sewells are recorded here, Moses and Greenberry. Greenberry is an unusual name and you note that Absolum Baker had a son named Greenberry. I think there is a connection there if we could find it. I know of no Sewells here and have enquired and no one knows of any by the name. If you will write to the land office in Raleigh, N.C., you may find a deed to Samuel Sewell's land. We have no way of knowing when he came to Rowan County—the earliest tax record was 1778, unless I find an earlier date in the court minutes. So many of our Rowan families stopped in Virginia before coming here.

If I go to Raleigh again this year, I shall have you in mind and will let you hear from me. I was there in May. The present Gov. W. Kerr Scott is a first cousin of my late husband. In a few days I shall go to Salisbury and finish your search.

Sincerely,

Callie F. Scott (Mrs. Q. J.)

My address is

Box 271, Cleveland, N.C.

P.S. Will return your chart as requested when the search is finished.

Cleveland, N. C.

Dear Mr. Sewell:

Know you are wondering why you haven't heard from me. I don't seem to get information from Wilmington District either, as that district comprised a number of counties. I would advise your writing to Miss Marybelle Delmare, Raleigh, N. C. and as she is there where all the records in the State of N.C. am sure she can find Samuel Sewell. I have enjoyed working for you.

Sincerely,
Callie Y. F. Scott (Mrs. Q. J.)

Dear Mr. Sewell:

I am sending you the Sewell re-search, all that I can find in this court house. You asked if the will of Samuel Sewell I sent you was Sr. or Jr. I have absolutely no way of telling, but my opinion is that he was Samuel Sr.

You surely misunderstood about the marriage of Samuel Jr. and Christian White, there was no forced marriage. Yes, the groom often signed his marriage bond as in the case of Samuel Jr., to Christian White. Am terribly sorry not to be able to find a deed to the land of Samuel Sewell Sr have consulted several of my lawyer friends, and they say he evidently failed to have it registered as sometimes happened.

Will write to Wilmington to try to find if he had land there as he is listed from that District, had you thought that Sr. may have been too old to fight and that Jr. moved to Wilmington? It's possible as we have no record of him here after 1782 (not sure) I think is correct. Am mailing you data under separate cover.

The young lady who copied the Baker will for you charged $1.00 if you send to me I will deliver to her.

“IN-LAW” INCIDENT IN ROWAN

Absolum Baker and Samuel Sewell each had sons named Greenberry and in the absence of actual proof of the maiden name of Samuel's wife, Elizabeth, coupled with a few other facts, we have seized upon this as strong indication, it not positive proof that the missing surname was Baker. The Bakers and Sewells were near neighbors in Maryland, settled on adjacent lands in North Carolina, and Samuel Sewell, Sr. and the aforementioned Elizabeth are buried in the Baker family burying ground in Rowan County. The Baker and Sewell sons and daughters apparently went to Georgia together and settled in the same community.

However, as is often the case in families large and small, complete harmony did not always reign between all of the members of the Sewell-Baker families. In the Rowan Minute Docket, 1787-1801 (pages not numbered and exact date not shown) in 1792 the case of Henry Sewell vs John Baker is entered and tried before a jury. (Tress. Asst. — Batty No. 15—plea “Guilty issue, Justification and Statute Limitation.

The death of Samuel Sewell occurred early in April, 1789. Elizabeth remained on the old place, presumably until her death. The will is given verbatim herewith following, and next follows deeds of three of the sons, William, Moses, and Greenberry, marking the approximate dates on which the last of the family emigrated to Georgia. Joseph was with his mother until after 1790, as shown by the United States Census report and John left around the time that Moses disposed of his property. Samuel, it is proved by records of deeds filed in Franklin County, Georgia, was in Georgia several years before the younger sons.

Samuel Sr., and Elizabeth lie buried in Baker Cemetery, near Kannapolis, North Carolina.

THE WILL OF SAMUEL SEWELL SR. OF ROWAN COUNTY, NORTH CAROLINA

In the name of God Amen, I Samuel Sewell of the County of Rowan State of No. Carolina, Planter, being very sick and weak in body but of perfect mind and memory, thanks be given to God; calling into mind the mortality of my body and knowing that it is appointed for all men once to die, do make and ordain this my last will and testament, that is to say principally and first of all, I recommend my soul into the hand of Almighty God that gave it, and my body I recommend to the earth to be buried in decent Christian burial, to the discretion of my executors nothing doubting but at the general resurrection I shall receive the same again by the mighty power of God and as touching such worldly estate wherewith it has pleased God to bless me in this life after my lawfull debts are paid, I give and demise and dispose of the same in the following form.

First, I give and bequeath to Elizabeth my dearly beloved wife One full third of my land with all improvements which I have made thereunto annexed, during the full time of her life, her wearing apparel Bed and bedding also my biggest chest and spinning wheel, together with my room dresser and pewter with all other furniture thereunto belonging, Table, Knives and Forks. I also bequeath unto my beloved wife, Elizabeth, all my plantation tools of every kind with one black brown horse called Diamond and one black mare known by the name of Bonny together with her own saddle and bridle. I also give and bequeath unto my beloved wife Elizabeth all my beds and all my furniture to them belonging with my three ploughs and tacklings belonging to each for the support of my five youngest children. I also give and bequeath to my beloved wife, Elizabeth four cows at her own choice together with two of my biggest steers and the two suckling Calves—also give and bequeath to my beloved wife, Elizabeth all my hogs and sheep kind, together with all my pots, ovens, and all my household furniture. I also bequeath unto my wife Elizabeth all my leather, flax cloath gurment (garment) thread of every kind, wool also, and all grain flour, roots and vegetables wheter preserved or graining, my son Nicholas's part in the full Spring crops excepted. I also give unto my wife my pails, tubs and baskets, all the moveables, bequeath unto my beloved wife during life in order to raise and educate my five youngest children and at her death this my will and pleasure that all and every one of them shall be sold at public sale and them and all profit arising from them, shall be equally divided amongst my five youngest children.

Item. I give and bequeath unto my beloved son Nicholas Sewell one black stallion colt and my rifle gun and furniture thereunto belonging and it is my will and pleasure that the remainder of my moveable estate shall be sold at public sale and the money arising therefore to be equally divided amongst all my children. It is my will and pleasure that my negro fellow Samuel shall stay in my plantation during the life of my wife Elizabeth to help raising my five youngest children and if it should please God to spear him, then, to be sold and the money price of him to be equally divided amongst my children and it is my will and pleasure that my plantation shall be divided in the most advantageous maner according to the lines there of into four equal divisions after the death of my beloved wife Elizabeth. Or at any time my son Nicholaus shall think proper, and it is my will and pleasure, that my son Nicholas shall have his choice of the four divisions made of the said land, providing it does not interrupt my improvement, which I allow my beloved wife Elizabeth, and the other three divisions I bequeath to my youngest sons (viz) John, Greenberry and Moses, each to have his division, and I do hereby constitute appoint and ordain my dearly beloved wife Elizabeth, my beloved son Nicolaus and my good and trusty friend James Nixon of Meclenburg County, executors of this my last will and test and I do hereby utterly disallow, revoke and disanul all and every other former test. wills legacies, bequeaths ratifying and confirming this and no other to be my last will and test:

ROWAN COUNTY — NORTH CAROLINA

The records of the time afford only a few glimpses into the lives of the Sewells during their brief period of residence in North Carolina — not more than forty five or fifty years at the most; but it was a turbulent period during which two important wars were fought; the French and Indian War in 1763 which resulted in great gains for the British who won and occupied territory along the Saint Lawrence settled by the French, and the whole of Florida. Following close upon the heels of this war came the Revolution in which the colonies threw off the yoke of the Mother Country and established the nation destined in many ways to become the greatest on earth.

The Sewells were not a warlike people; they preferred to live the lives of country gentlemen, but they rose to the defense of their country when attacked, and their names are written into the records of the Revolutionary War in North Carolina and in Georgia, and later largely written into the records of the wars waged for and by our country, in whatsoever state of the Union they were. In this brief chapter we give their Revolutionary record and will endeavor to record later patriotic services in other wars in other chapters dealing with the times during which they occurred.

The family, patriotic in war, was not backward in wooing, winning, and being wooed and won, and as the boys and girls reached a marriageable age we find that they succumbed to manly and womanly charm and united with suitors and belles of their communities, and we are fortunate to find recorded several of the marriage bonds of the Sewells of this generation, which we exhibit on other pages of this history.

The Sewells lived quietly and "peaceably with all men" and there appears to have been only one court action started by any of them, an action brought by Henry Sewell vs. John Baker which was decided in favor of Sewell. This was in 1792. The parties to the suit were cousins.

In 1789, as before stated, Samuel Sewell, Senior, died and the elder sons moved to Georgia. Elizabeth lived until after 1800 and after her death the younger sons moved to Georgia. Joseph had married Esther Long in 1790. They probably went to Georgia in the fall of 1795 as we have a copy of a deed given by him in Rowan County, 8th September, to John Armstrong, covering 290 acres of land sold to Armstrong for £ 250 sterling, and in Franklin County, Georgia, Deed Book N 106, 107 it is shown that he witnessed a deed, John Baker to Christopher Sewell in that county on 25th December 1799. Where he was between 1795 and 1799 we can only conjecture, but some time during that period he went to Georgia, but on 11th February, 1809 he married for the second time in Maury County, Tennessee, Eluzabeth Stone. They lived in Maury County and he died there in 1832. We have no way of determining the exact date on which any of the Sewells arrived in Georgia, but Moses and Greenberry sold their lands in Rowan County, North Carolina, on November 25, 1805 and (see copies of deeds hereinafter) we presume that John disposed of his holdings around the same date as he received a deed from Richard Woods and Susannah, his wife, in Franklin County, Georgia on 24 January 1806 for 110 acres of land in that County. On April 8, 1806, Moses Sewell had a deed from Samuel Gardner of Jackson County covering five hundred acres, more or less, on Broad River and Traylor Creek in Franklin County, Georgia. He disposed of his Rowan County holdings 25 November 1805. On the same date his brother, Greenberry, also disposed of his Rowan lands and moved to Franklin County, Georgia, but did not settle there, and later went to Carroll County, Ga., where he died in 1846/7. As before stated the United States Census shows no Sewells lived in Rowan County at that time.

So ends the history of the Samuel Sewell family in Rowan County, North Carolina, as we know it. We will now turn to the Empire State of the South for what we have been able to find of their subsequent history.

The pageant is again in motion as it "Marches down to the verdant halls of North Georgia," where it continues to unfold.

THE SEWELLS OF GEORGIA — THE ORIGINAL SETTLERS

(W.L.S.)

A speech made by an Indian Chief, Red Jacket, to representatives of a Missionary Society:

"There was a time when our forefathers owned this great island (America) Their seats extended from rising sun to setting sun. The Great Spirit had made it for the use of Indians. He had created the buffalo, the deer, and other animals for food. Their skins served us for clothing. He had scattered them over the country and taught us how to take them. He had caused the earth to produce corn for bread. All this he had done for his red children, because he loved them — But an evil day came upon us. Your forefathers crossed the great water, and landed on this Island. Tidings were carried back and more came amongst us — at length their number had greatly increased. They wanted more land, they wanted our country. Our eyes were opened and our minds became uneasy. War took place. Indians were hired to fight Indians, and many of our people were destroyed. We do not understand these things.”

From Judge Alley, “Random Thoughts”:

“The Cherokee Indians were the first settlers, so far as we know, they at one time occupied not only Georgia and Alabama, but both the Carolinas, Tennessee, and Virginia. The territory claimed by them was 40,000 square miles. Their most important towns were on the headwaters of the Savannah (River) in Georgia, the Keowee, the Seneca and the Oconee, in South Carolina, the Tuckasegee and Hiawassee in North Carolina, and the Little Tennessee, from where it rises in Towns County, Georgia, all the way through Rabun County to the Tennessee River. Bancroft’s History of the United States tells us that the Cherokee Nation had about 150 towns and villages scattered along the bends of the streams alone. Tchota on the banks of the Tennessee River was the capital of this nation.

“There were no definite, fixed boundaries of the nation and on every side bitter contests were waged by rival tribes, on the Virginia side they were checked by the forces of Powhatan; on the east they were in constant trouble with Tuscarora and Catawba tribes, and the Sara and Cheraw Indians were their bitter enemies. On the south were the unfriendly Creeks, The Chickasaws and Shawnee Nations fought them from the Tennessee Valley. History does not agree when the Indians first occupied our country. There is abundant proof, however, that they were living in Mexico when Cortez overthrew the Axtec government. The Cherokees have a tradition that they came from Asia to Mexico and then to America. It can be truly said (that) the Indians were the original settlers.” (7)

GEORGIA — OUTLINE OF EARLY HISTORY

When the first Sewells settled in Georgia before the Revolution, there had been a few settlements and an organized government within its borders for not more, and perhaps much less than fifty years.

According to a map of 1775 Georgia exercised jurisdiction over practically all of the territory now comprised in what we are wont to call “The Deep South,” embracing the States of Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi. It extended from the Savannah River to the Mississippi. But twenty five years later Georgia was bounded on the West by the Chattahoochee River, a strip of territory set off in 1798 and known as Mississippi Territory, of which Natchez was the chief town, and north of this strip was the territory north to the Tennessee Line and between the Chattahoochee and the Mississippi, designated as “Disputed by Georgia and the United States.” In 1802 the territory was ceded to the United States by Georgia, after a long struggle. North was the State of Tennessee and on the South the Spanish possessions.

The settlement of Georgia was the direct result of investigations made by James Oglethorpe, a former army officer, who had become prominent by reason of efforts he had made toward ameliorating the conditions that existed among the poor, and particularly in efforts toward improvement of conditions of debtor's prisons. He was joined in this worthy program by several other wealthy and benevolent men and a Company was formed in 1732 for the purpose of settling the reserved Carolina tract under the name of Georgia, in honor of the king, George II. The name was at once euphonious and appropriate. The Company was given a charter under the name of "The Trustees for establishing the Colony of Georgia in America," and was granted all the land from the Savannah to the Altamaha. One writer has said, "Never was a colony founded upon motives more disinterested." It was to be, literally, "an asylum for the oppressed."

Oglethorpe, in November, 1732, headed as governor and general (serving without pay) the first expedition which was fitted out consisting of thirty five families, and in February 1733 selected a site for the first settlement on a high bluff overlooking the Savannah River and about ten miles from the sea. He made friends with the natives, signing a non-aggression pact with them, probably assuring the success of the venture.

A second settlement was made in 1734 by a band of persecuted German Protestant exiles from Salzburg, who "pitched their tents" at Ebenezer. These Germans proved to be a great asset, as they were energetic and thrifty and were, with the Highlanders, a stable influence in the colony, being the only two classes who were ever satisfied with anything. The men who were rescued from the debtor's prisons and for whom the Colony was founded to bring relief, proved to be a lot of idle and worthless malcontents.

The City of Augusta, on the Savannah, about midway between the mountains and the sea, was founded in the same year (1734) as a fur trade depot, and the center of the trade between the Carolinas, Georgia, and the West. In seven years the resident population of Augusta rose to 47 souls, but upwards of 125 white men of all kindred trades are said to have gained a livelihood from the traffic centering at Augusta station. The estimated annual trade was about fifty thousand pounds.

Meanwhile, Frederica, at the Altamaha's mouth, had been settled in 1736. We will know more of Frederica later.

In the same year, General Oglethorpe led an expedition to the Southern limits of the English claimed territory.

Mention has been made of the rough and discordant elements in the colony, but three men were in Georgia in those early years, whose names have been emblazoned as among the greatest in the world's history. They were the Wesley brothers, Charles and John, and George Whitefield. Charles was secretary to Oglethorpe and John was a missionary to the Indians. John went back to England and was succeeded by Whitefield, one of the greatest of preachers. It was due to the efforts of these three men that the great Methodist Episcopal Church was organized.

In 1739 war broke out between England and Spain. To forestall any hostile movement from the Spanish at Saint Augustine, Oglethorpe lay siege to that city (1740) but the expedition failed, sickness having broken out in the camp, and the support was further weakened by desertions. General Oglethorpe withdrew and thereupon the Spaniards paid a return visit, but a British fleet appearing at Frederica, they were frightened into a hasty retreat.

In 1743, General Oglethorpe went back to England and never returned. The colony's development slowed up after that, but improved when the charter was revoked and Georgia became a royal province, with a government similar to that of South Carolina. This was in 1752.

Slavery was introduced into the colony in 1749. Free traffic in rum was allowed and restrictions removed from the acquisition of lands.

Georgia was the last of the original thirteen states and was one of the weakest until long after the Revolution.

The population of the colony in 1750 was less than 5,000.

The French-Indian War in 1763, resulted in great territorial gains for the British and consequent governmental adjustments, and it was at this time that the governor of Georgia was given jurisdiction over the entire Mississippi territory.

This was the "Empire State of the South," though not so called yet, at the time when the first Sewells settled there. It is a far cry from those days, and the weak young colony has developed into a giant in strength and stature and is on the threshold of an expansion undreamed of in days of yore, and marvelous to behold.

FRANKLIN COUNTY CREATED

Franklin County has been called “a child of the Revolutionary War.” By an Act of the Legislature passed February 25, 1784, the ninth and tenth counties of Georgia were created. They were Franklin and Washington counties. In 1777 the first eight counties had been created, as follows: Camden, Charlton, Effingham, Glynn, Liberty, Richmond, Wilkes, and Chatham.

Washington and Franklin were created from lands ceded by the Cherokee Indians as penalties for their hostile acts visited upon the settlers during the Revolution, and were the first counties created. The Indians ceded the land in a treaty made May 31, 1783 with Governor Lyman Hall, General John Twiggs, Colonel Elijah Clarke, Colonel W. Frew, Edward Telfair, and General Samuel Elbert, who constituted a commission appointed by the Legislature.

The boundaries described in the treaty were as follows: “A new line shall be drawn, without delay, between the present settlements in the said State and the hunting grounds of the said Indians, to begin on the Savannah River, where the present line strikes it, thence up said river to a place on the northern branch of same (commonly called Keowee), where a northeast line, to be from the top of Ocunna mountain, shall intersect; thence along said line in a southwest direction to the top of said mountain; thence in the same direction to Tugaloo river, thence to the top of Currahe mountain, thence to the head of source of the most southern branch of the Oconee River, including the waters of the same, thence down the middle of said branch to the Creek line.”

Under the terms of the treaty, trade with the Indians would be carried on under governmental regulation, and it stated that the governor and commissioners had made presents to the Indians, which they have received and acknowledged.

The boundaries of Franklin County as described in the Act were as follows: “Beginning at the Savannah River where the west line of Wilkes County strikes the same, thence along the said line to Cherokee Corner, from thence in the same direction to the south branch of the Oconee River, thence up said river to the head or source of the most southern stream thereof, thence along the temporary line, separating the Indians Hunting Ground to the northern branch of the Savannah River, known as Keowee, and down said river to the beginning.”

Franklin County, by this Act, was about the size of the present Rhode Island, and the whole state of Georgia contained about as many inhabitants as are now living in Franklin County. It was a huge, vastly rich, but sparsely settled territory.

It was realized by the lawmakers that it was too large so they early began to lop off sections to form new counties. Counties formed from the original

Franklin County, as given by Lavonia Times-Gauge, are Jackson, 1796; Clarke, 1801; Oconee, 1875; Stephens, 1905; and the South Carolina counties of Oconee, a part of Anderson, and Pickens County, were carved from Franklin, and were in Georgia until April 28, 1787, when this territory was ceded to South Carolina in the Revolutionary Treaty, which both states approved and agreed to respect.

TWO FAMOUS MEN OF EARLY FRANKLIN COUNTY

The history of Franklin County contains the names of two most distinguished sons of that early day. One was Captain James Terrell; the other was Colonel James Little.

Captain Terrell was a devoted soldier of the Revolution, and declared that the cause was dearer to him than his own life. He served as head of his company "until he received a disability by a musket ball that shattered his hip into pieces." (Historical Sketches of Georgia — White.)

Colonel Little also was a gallant Revolutionary, a close friend of General Washington, and a pall bearer at his funeral.

FIRST COURT IN THE COUNTY SAT ON A GUM LOG

There was no court house in Franklin County when it was organized, and it is said that the first court sat upon a gum log.

THE SEWELLS IN GEORGIA AND FRANKLIN COUNTY

When the Sewells left the "Old North State," they exchanged it for "the Empire State of the South." From the oldest State in the South in point of discovery and attempts at settlement, to the youngest. They first settled in Franklin County, in North Georgia, a vast undeveloped empire in itself. From this county, as it increased in wealth and population eleven counties of Georgia have been formed, viz., Clarke, Jackson, Walton, Gwinnett, Haversham, Banks, Barrow, Madison, Oconee, Stephens, and Hart; and three in South Carolina, Pickens, Oconee, and Anderson, ceded to that state by Georgia by the treaty of Beaufort, (S. C.) 1787. The county was created February 25, 1784. Carnesville became the county seat in 1806. Homes of Warren Philpot and Benjamin Acles — court was held prior to that — (From 1797 "Court House" and Carnesville were synonymous.)

With the exception of Joseph, all of the sons of Samuel Sewell, Sr., of Maryland and North Carolina settled in Georgia, and all but Greenberry in Franklin County. We find in the records of deeds given to Samuel in 1797; Christopher in 1798; William 1805; John and Moses, 1806; Joshua 1810. But under the headright system, James Sewell was granted 200 acres of land in Elbert County in 1783; Samuel received 300 acres in Wilkes in 1784; and Joshua 200 in Wilkes in 1785. Samuel also had a deed from I. Few, 7 July 1794 to cover 287½ acres on Broad River. These grants are mentioned as evidence that the Sewells were living in Georgia as early as 1783, but although they received grants in other counties, Franklin was the county of residence. In a word, Samuel, Joshua, Nicholas, James, Christopher, William and Henry Sewell and Benjamin and Comfort Sewell Baker, were the pioneer Sewells of Franklin County. Greenberry Sewell lived in the county but married Ann Braswell 29 December, 1807 and moved to Carroll County. Joseph also, tarried for a season but moved on to Tennessee.

The pioneers lived in primitive style building stockades for defense against the Indians who were their next door neighbors and at times hostile to the settlers.

The law was strict in regard to the infringements of whites upon Indian territory. The Indians also at times infringed upon the lands of the whites, so there was an uneasy peace normally between the whites and reds, broken by open hostilities at times and the settlers did not enjoy comparative tranquility until on March 8, 1828, during the administration of President John Quincy Adams, when a treaty was made with the Creeks by which all Creek lands in Georgia were ceded and the Creeks departed for a new home beyond the Mississippi.

Franklin County lands, of course, were originally Indian lands and were acquired from them by a treaty signed with the Cherokees on May 31, 1872. The treaty was negotiated with the red men by Lyman Hall, governor, General John Twiggs, Colonel Elijah Clarke; Colonel W. Few; Edward Telfair; and General Samuel Elbert; commissioners appointed by the Legislature. It was signed under a giant oak which is still standing and known as the Treaty Oak.

The treaty was made with the Indians in 1783, and on February 25, 1784, the act was passed by the legislature whereby Franklin County was erected. The territory and bounds to be included in the new County, as shown in the Lavonia Times, February 23, 1934, were as follows:

“Beginning at the Savannah River where the west line of Wilkes County strikes the same, thence along the said line to Cherokee Corner, from thence in the same direction to the south branch of the Oconee River, thence up said river to the head or source of the most southern stream thereof, thence along the temporary line separating the Indian Hunting ground to the northern branch of the Savannah River, known as Keowee, and down said river to the beginning.”

The County was named for Benjamin Franklin.

INDIAN HOSTILITIES

Some of the conditions prevailing in the county during pioneer days is revealed in a letter written by Colonel Benjamin Cleveland to Edw. Telfair, Indian Agent, from Tugalo, May 15, 1786, and reproduced in the Lavonia Times of February 23, 1934. A verbatim quote:

May 18, 1786

“Franklin
Tugalo,

Sirs this is infor you of the present circumstanc of Our Frontier. Our people is much alarmed at the late hostilities acted by the Creek Indians on the Ocone and Expect Every moment when it will be our unhappy fate and should it be the case the consequence will certainly be Desperate. Our settlement at this time is Verry weak not consisting of more than 45 men in the Upper Company which have the greater part of the frontier to face and them are so Incumbered with their familys so that they Cannot do Duty and Expect to get weaker every day some moving and Others talking of moving that we are Doubtful we shall not be able to stand throug weakness and scarcity of provision We therefore humbly beg You'l send us a Rilief of men and provisions to support our familys We think that if we can have a gard of 30 men we will In-deavour to stand Our Ground If we get Releif in a short time We therefore hope you'll send them with all possible speed. We have the honour to be You Most Obedient Humble Servants —

Benj. Cleveland
Jesse Walton
John Cleveland Capt.

The waggon is now on the way to Receive the arms and ammunitiion for our County."

An answer was sent by Telfair but no arms, and only powder and ball ordered by Cleveland could be sent at the time.

The red man on several occasions accused his white brother of having introduced the vice of stealing to the original and native Americans and it appears that said red brethren became adepts at horse stealing in Franklin County, according to court records of thefts in the County, published in the Lavonia paper, which records the loss of eight horses by stealing in 1785-1786.

Also, it is hard to realize in these days of a closely unified federation of states, but in those early days before a strong centralized national government had been born or developed, the states guarded their frontiers closely and passports were necessary for travel beyond Georgian borders — into the Cumberlands, for instance, or into Mississippi Territory. This was done as much to protect against undesirables as against Indians. The passport was issued in a form similar to the following:

Hudson's River frontier of Franklin County, 4th of April, 1864,
To whom it may concern.

Whereas Lewis Dickens, Caleb Dickinson, Nathan Horn, and Lewis Jones, hath made known to the Subscribers, of their intentions in removing to the westward of the Cumberland mountains with their families; and that it is two hundred miles less in the distance of their journey, to pass through the Cherokee Nation; and that (it) is considered that it will be much to their safety to obtain a Passport for the purpose —

We Certifie that all the Men above named are honest men and good citizens, that they have for a considerable (time) declared their intentions of Removal; and we believe that they have settled their affairs and dealings with all Persons in this part of the country.

FRANKLIN COUNTY, GEORGIA CRIMES AND PUNISHMENT

A description of the social order existing in Franklin County in the time of our Sewell ancestors would not be complete without some reference to the crimes committed and the punishment meted out therefor. Our space will not permit us to deal with the subjects in detail, but horse stealing appears to have been prevalent, and laws against it very severe. The whipping post was in use, as in other States, and the law provided that, on conviction for a first offense the guilty one would be taken to the post and given thirty nine lashes on the bare back for three successive days, and be confined to the pillory for an hour after each whipping, and then be kept in prison for not exceeding one month, nor less than thirty days. For the second offense the penalty was death without benefit of clergy.

The crime of larceny was punishable by 25 lashes and petit larceny by fifteen lashes.

The branding iron also was freely used as an instrument of punishment and torture.

Murder was not common, and hangings rare, but a few instances are on record in which the extreme penalty was given by the court.

The inhumane punishment given in some other states for small offenses; that of cutting off the ear of the offender, seems not to have been used in Georgia.

PIONEER SOCIAL CONDITIONS

It must not be imagined that the early pioneers were too occupied with dreads and horrors to spend any time in social activities. Such was far from the case. The log rollings of those days were occasions when the entire community would gather and together build a log residence for a new comer. When work was done there was a great dinner prepared by the women, after which sports, games, and dancing were enjoyed, everyone became acquainted, and doubtless many of the belles and swains felt more than a touch of romance, and in the coming months it might become necessary to have a log rolling for them.

RELIGION AND CHURCHES

Religion, too, was not neglected. Like the dwellings, the original churches were of logs and some of them were in use for almost a century. Hebron Presbyterian church in the southern portion of what is now Banks County, but when organized in 1796, in or near the center of Franklin; for many years was a great factor in the religious life of the people. The Sewells were not Presbyterians and did not attend this church, and we have no data by which we can determine just what church the early Sewells attended, but in the annals of Bold Springs Methodist Church, located about eight miles southwest of Carnesville, it is recorded that Nicholas Sewell was one of seven trustees to whom the Bold Springs Camp Ground was leased on August 2, 1739 by Nathan Gunnells. The Ebenezer Methodist Church is another very old church in the county and dates from 1820. The Baptist churches of Poplar Springs, Middle River, and Double Branches date from 1801.

The course of education received attention from the Legislature in 1822, when an Act was passed providing funds for common schools and in 1825 The Franklin County Academy was established by legislative Act.

WILLIAM FLEMING AND THE INDIANS

William Fleming was one of the pioneers of Franklin County whose keen wit saved him from capture and very probable death by the Indians.

On one occasion he is said to have ridden into the woods to tend and salt his cattle, after which he wended his way homeward. En route he discovered that the lock on his rifle was out of order and the gun useless.

A little later he was aware that three armed Indians were pursuing him. There was nothing to do but run for it, on his old and sluggish horse. The Indians fired when in shooting distance and he was hit by a bullet. However he kept going, and urged his horse on as fast as he could. Soon he came to a deep ravine which he would have to detour around while the Indians could go straight across and gain on him. In the face of this peril Fleming's native wit came to his rescue. Wheeling his charger around he shouted, "Here they are boys; come quick and let's shoot the red skins." Whereupon he charged at them, gun presented, and the savages fled and soon were out of sight. Although bleeding copiously from his wounds, he rode on eight miles to have his wounds dressed at the fort, and in a few months he had fully recovered.

Writing in the Times and Gauge of Lavonia, Georgia, in the issue of September 23, 1934, Alton H. Flasure says of the conflict with the Indians:

"Franklin County which originally included a large portion of Northeast Georgia, was for a long time exposed to the ravages of the Indians. In almost every part it was found necessary to erect forts and block houses to protect the inhabitants against the savages. Cruelties were inflicted upon the helpless women and children, which would chill the blood.

"The first to settle on Crockett's Creek, in the Northern portion of the County was William Crockett, a young unmarried man, with his widowed mother, who had seven other children, all younger than William.

"Young Crockett was sitting in the door of his little house one day making shoes to wear at his wedding, which was near at hand, when James H. Little, Esquire, then a young man, rode up in haste and warned him to take his family as quickly as possible to the fort in the neighborhood, as there was a fresh trail of a considerable party of Indians passing not far away. Crockett said that he did not have time, and also that one or two false alarms had been recently given so Mr. Little, failing to prevail upon him, hastened on to warn others. That day all the families in the neighborhood except Crockett's escaped to the Fort and the men leaving a guard to protect the women and children, set out the next morning in pursuit of the savages. Having struck the trail, they followed it to Crockett's house where an appalling spectacle met their eyes. In one pile lay the murdered and scalped bodies of the widow Crockett and her eight children. The house and surroundings had been ravaged of everything that could excite the cupidity of a ruthless Cherokee savage. They pursued the enemies to the line of their territory but did not overtake them. They then returned and buried the Crockett family all in one cave near the creek, on a little bluff, and reared a monument of stones over the common grave. We are told that the man into whose hands the Crockett land fell, soon removed the stones in order that he might build a chimney to his own dwelling."

DEATH OF GEORGE WASHINGTON

Franklin County Man Served as Washington's Pall Bearer

On December 14, 1799, the spirit of the country's greatest, most noble man and patriot, to date, still known as "the Father of his country" went home to his Maker, and General George Washington, leader of our armies in the Revolution, and this country's first President, was no more.

He was laid to rest in the family vault at Mount Vernon in the presence of a multitude of people, all mourning the loss of their idolized leader. They came from far and near, and our own young Franklin County, Georgia, was represented in the funeral exercises by Colonel James Little, a close friend of the dead hero.

Mourning was general throughout the nation. Congress adopted appropriate resolutions and adjourned. John Adams, the president, at the time, sent the following message to the House of Representatives:

"I receive with great respect and affection the condolence of the House of Representatives on the melancholy and afflicting event in the death of the most illustrious personage which this country ever produced. I sympathize with you, with the nation, and with good men through the world, in this irreparable loss sustained by us all."

EARLY MILITARY ACTIVITY

With the inspiration of the Revolution behind them and the very real need present with them for an active and efficient military organization, it was natural that such an organization should be organized in Franklin County at an early date. We do not have a roster of the members, but it is safe to assume that all the able-bodied Sewells in the County were enrolled. The County was divided into thirteen military Districts:

Ashland, Bryant, Canon, Carnesville, Dooley, Flintsville, Gum Log, Manley, Middle River, Red Hill, Stranges and Willborn.

In 1791, on February 12, the following military organizations were ordered: (Lavonia Times-Gauge)

Larkin Cleveland, Esquire, Colonel

Williams Harden, Esquire, Lieutenant-Colonel

Middleton Woods, Esquire, Major

First or Lower Company

John Payne, Esquire, Captain

Mark Harden, Gentleman, First Lieutenant

Benedict White, Gentleman, Second Lieutenant

Second or Gum Log Company

Joseph Humphries, Esquire, Captain

John Stonecypher, Gentleman, First Lieutenant

Nathan Coffee, Gentleman, Second Lieutenant

Third or Upper Company

John Cleveland, Esquire, Captain
John Clark, Jr., Gentleman, First Lieutenant
John Mullins, Gentleman, Second Lieutenant

Fourth or Broad River Company

Joseph Dobbs, Esquire, Captain
Joseph Terrell, Gentleman, First Lieutenant
John Lane, Gentleman, Second Lieutenant

The Lavonia Times, mentioned several times previously, gives us a copy of an interesting old muster roll of infantry and spies, dated 1796.

Following is the roll:

Muster Rolle of a Detachment of Militia Infantry, garrisoned at Fort Washington, under command of Lieutenant Martin Harding, ordered into the service of the United States by His Excellency Governor Jared Irwin — from the 2^dth of April to the 20th of July 1796, inclusively:

Interest in the defense of the county in the early days was expressed in the formation of volunteer military organizations such as the ones noted below. They were officered by men who had served during the Revolution, and were drilled at regular intervals in the arts of warfare, on drills set apart for their own use, as a patriotic service, without pay. The Lavonia Times-Gauge gives the names of several of the men of that day who unselfishly devoted their time and talents in the cause of defense of the county against the Indians, and a bit of history in re. their organization, as follows:

Alfred S. Allen Offers Services

Carnesville, Sept. 30th, 1838

LAND GRANT FRAUDS

All the counties of Georgia created before 1785, were headright counties. A writer in the Lavonia Times-Gauge describes the Land Grant frauds of Georgia as one of the monumental frauds of the State. It was perpetrated when the whole country had been stirred by the infamous Yazoo Fraud. The state was still raw and undeveloped — land values were practically nil and nothing was ever done about it.

In the head right counties no surveys were made of the lands and no land districts were designated and no lots laid. Surveys were ordered by the Land Court on application for a land grant which in no case could exceed a thousand acres.

The counties in which the fraud occurred most frequently were Washington, Franklin, and Montgomery. These counties were erected shortly after the Revolution and opened for settlement and it has been suggested that the idea of lottery fraud had been prevalent at the time of their erection. In Montgomery County the fraudulent system was known as the Pine Barren Speculation; in Washington and Franklin — the fraudulent Land Grant Speculation.

When Washington and Franklin Counties were organized in 1784, an act was passed providing that "Every citizen of this State, or any other State of the United States, that shall come with an intent to settle, and form an actual residence in this state, shall be entitled to a warrant of survey for any unlocated lands in the State in a manner aforementioned, so as the same shall not exceed one thousand acres to any one person." The head of a family was allowed two hundred acres. An additional fifty acres was allowed for each negro slave. The number of acres granted to one family on negroes limited to ten, and specifically provided that in no case could one person acquire title to more than a thousand acres under the headright system.

It was a fine system but fraud crept in. In a list published in The Times-Gauge fraudulent claims are shown dating back to 1786. The state officials appear to have been obsessed with it. Fraudulent grants were issued for many thousands more acres than contained in the counties. The procedure of obtaining the fraudulent grants began with the election of Land Courts and County Surveyors who would be agreeable to certifying to surveys that were never made.

In many cases, the newspaper article continues, to make the survey seem more real, corners were identified by the term hickory, post oak, etc. The same terms were used to give the land a sound of fertility. The grants which were fraudulently recorded with the State Surveyor-General had copies taken from the records and used for traffic in the North, mainly in and around Philadelphia. The northern people were shown opportunities for excellent investments in the new state where the southern climate was quite favorable for operations by those who had idle capital lying around.

Although they stipulated that not more than 1,000 acres should go to one individual, from a list in the Times-Gauge we have selected the following grants of 100,000 acres each to seven individuals: to Daniel Beall, 1794; John Collier, 1794; William Farmer, 1794; Henry Garrett, 1796; Joseph A. Jones, 1795; Leroy Pope, 1795; John Collier, 1796; each 100,000 acres. In addition to two grants of 100,000 each, John Collier had a grant of 54,000 acres in 1794. Receiving grants of more than 100,000 acres in one grant were Daniel Beall in 1794, 148,000 acres; John Cunningham, 1794, 102,000; Richard Dawson, 1794, 130,000 acres; John Harrington, 1794, 111,000; John Smyth, 157,000 acres, 1794. The year 1794 was apparently the banner year for the crooks. All of the foregoing grants and many more were issued for lands supposedly in Franklin County. The grants are said to have been issued to non-residents of Franklin County and were obtained for dishonest use. Actually grants were issued in Franklin County for 4,948,633 acres of land whereas the County's entire acreage was less than 500,000 acres. There was much talk and much criticism of the frauds, but nothing was ever done about it. No one was ever punished for them.

LANDS GRANTED BY LOTTERY SYSTEM AFTER 1795

The lands in Franklin County were distributed under the headright system until 1785. In 1783 a land court was established, composed of a majority of the justices of each county, to sit at the place of the Superior Court each month. (Georgia, Colony and State — Johnson, pages 176, 177.) Stevens relates what tumult prevailed at the opening of the land office, in Augusta in May, 1784. Men were forced to keep doors and windows closed, as from 1500 to 2000 men surged outside, uttering menacing threats and grabbing warrants, when possible.

By 1784, no more free land was to be had, but each individual had to purchase his land, paying from one shilling in gold or silver per acre for the first hundred acres up to two shillings and six pence per acre for four hundred acres, and so on. Men could purchase from fifty to one thousand acres per family. Title was not granted before the would-be owner had resided thereon for at least twelve months and had cultivated three acres for every hundred. A law of 1785 demanded the settling and cultivating of the land subscribed to within eighteen months, and another in 1789 provided that plots must be set forth clearly. To facilitate this, a state surveyor-general and one surveyor for each county were appointed and once in every ten years every captain or commanding officer of the Militia Districts had to appoint three processioners, who were to go around each tract and renew the land marks.

After 1785 the head right system was abolished. The lottery system in Franklin County was established in 1818. Under this system we are told, tracts consisting of one hundred two and a half acres were laid off except those bordering on rivers, where fractional parts sometimes occurred. The lottery system provided that every man, widow and orphan resident of the State would be entitled to one draw, and all soldiers of the Revolution, up to 1825.

The following members of the Sewell family drew land under the lottery system and based on their Revolutionary service, in the drawings of 1825 and 1827.

In 1825 Joshua Sewell, in Captain Blankenship's district. Captain Blankenship's district lay in that part of the county in which the county seat, Carnesville, is located. And listed in the Times-League under the head of Major Bruce's Battalion, as having been in the lottery of 1827 are Comfort Baker, W.R.S. (Widow Revolutionary Soldier, nee Sewell), Christopher Sewell, and William Sewell.

SEWELLS IN THE WAR OF 1812

The Sewells, Abihu and Samuel, answered the call to arms to defend their country from invasion by the mother country in the War of 1812-1814, as the following records from the Adjutant General's office in Washington attest:

FRANKLIN COUNTY — JOHN SEWELL AND MARY RICHMOND

John Sewell was born September 7, 1777 in Rowan County, North Carolina. He married Mary Richmond, born April 12, 1785, of the same county, on November 5, 1802. Together they went to Franklin County, Georgia. The exact date we cannot determine, but we know that their first child, Elizabeth, was born in North Carolina on July 1, 1805; and in Franklin County, Georgia, Deed Book R p. 117, there is recorded a deed given by Richard and Susannah Woods to John Sewell for one hundred and ten and one half acres of land, "bounded as follows, towel (to wit), sic Beginning where the ——— Thompson old line crosses the Grove fork of Broad River, then South five degrees west Nineteen Chains and seventy links to a post Oak Corner then South Eighty five degrees, East sixteen Chains to a post Oak Corner as it meanders to the mouth thereof then up the Hudson River as it meanders to the mouth of the Grove Fork then up the said Grove Fork as it meanders to the place of Beginning."

This deal was consummated on January 24, 1806. The consideration was three hundred dollars. We therefore place the time of John and Mary's arrival in Franklin County at some time between July 1, 1805 and January 24, 1806, and their settlement to have been made on the one hundred ten and one half acre tract indicated in the above deed.

This tract of land was probably a portion of 450 acres belonging to the estate of John Sewell (who died in 1862) which was sold to Elizabeth Anglin, by Richard Sewell and Greenberry Sewell, excrs. on February 17, 1863, for $6905.00 (Coweta County Book A p. 205).

John and Mary Richmond Sewell were blessed with a large family of children, eleven in number, as follows:

1. Elizabeth, b. Rowan Co., N.C. July 1, 1805; married Wm. Anglin on Jan. 17, 1828, d. in Banks Co. Ga. 1893.

LEVI FRANCIS SEWELL

Levi Francis, second child of John Asbury and Martha Polk Sewell, was born in Coweta County, Georgia, on November 15, 1840, soon after his parents had moved there from Madison County.

Records of that county show that his father purchased Lot 161, 8th District, 202½ A., October 23, 1848, and Lot 252, 5th District, 100 A., was purchased by him on February 14, 1849. Again on August 1, 1851, he purchased Lot 225, 14, 4th and 5th Districts, containing 303¾ acres, making a total of 606¾ acres he now owned in Coweta County.

On January 2, 1865, just prior to the close of the (Un-) Civil War, Levi Francis, now a man grown of 25 years and a successful wooer, united in marriage to Miss Martha F. Morgan of Coweta, and three years later, on January 29, 1868, he bought Lot 53, 4th District, containing 101¼ acres and became a landed proprietor in that county.

However, according to my father, James A. Sewell, who is still living, Levi F. Sewell, like all of the Sewells and most other people, was interested in bettering himself and in 1871 or 1872, he moved from Coweta to Randolph County, Alabama, where land was selling at $1.00 per acre. My father, a few years ago, wrote a statement containing all he could remember in re the move from Georgia across the border into Alabama, which is so interesting that I am quoting it verbatim for the reader's benefit, to show what moving and travel was like, and what hardships were involved in so doing in those days.

I quote:

"My father, Levi F. Sewell, moved from Coweta County to Randolph County, Alabama, from a three room house on my Grandfather Sewell's farm, where I was born February 12, 1869. It must have been about 1871 or 1872.

"My father loaded all the household goods on a two mule or two horse wagon — Just poor, scrubby, slow-moving animals. It taken two days to make the trip to Alabama, about 25 to 30 miles. We camped the first night after passing through what is now Roofville, Georgia, at creek near Laurel Hill. We made it to Alabama, he had bought 80 acres of land at about $1.00 per acre — part of it was bottom land. He told the folks when we left Coweta he was looking for cheap bottom land — it was very good land and first year he planted sorghum cane, corn and peas, and just a small part in cotton.

"When we arrived there was not any place to live except an old run down little shack, so the neighbors came in — helped build (a) log house — they built it in about two days — chimney and all — stopped cracks with mud and it was very comfortable. The wash place was about three hundred yards from house at spring. He made a very good crop of things to live off.

"He returned to Newnan where he had a credit with Arnall and Farmer, then large supply merchants, and he brought his cotton over there, paid them up — told them he wanted to buy some more cheap land that was bottom land — asked them to come over — look at it and see if they would not let him have money to buy it from old man Whit Hearin. I think he had to pay $2.00 an acre, but they told him to go on, buy it, for when he got it paid for it would be worth much more then."

"So he could not split rails and clear up the land — that is it would take time, so he bought a steer to plow to help the scrub stock — he built a house upon (the) public road — bought set of blacksmith's tools — sharpened his own farm tools and for his neighbors — hired Frank James paying him $10.00 a month and board.

"So he began to rent out part of his farm. Jim Maddox and his brother came to live on the farm as share croppers. He bought him a little ground hog thrash — traveled around — thrashed wheat and oats and got a toll. So then we began to have biscuits for breakfast with sorghum syrup, coffee made out of parched wheat. He was to become the most prominent man in the community. They elected him Justice of the Peace. He held court at Lamar first month and performed marriage ceremonies.

"About this time Carrollton, Georgia got railroad built there and supply stores spring up there. Rhudy & Spurlock, and Horace Stewart's father — C. B. Simonton and I think, L. C. Mandeville were all supply merchants.

“So I had typhoid fever — lost my right eye and Dr. Abner Calhoun told my father nothing could be done about it; for him to keep me out of the sun. My father opened a little store at Graham, Alabama.

“So my father sold out this and rented a store and got J. D. Sewell to come in. He and I run it for about one year, so my father left and moved to Carrollton; about 1886 my brother Willis took over the farm; then my father gave forty acres of land to all children, part of it in Alabama, and to my sister Sims of near Burwell, Georgia.”

WORLEY LEVI SEWELL AND MARY FRANCES GRESHAM

Worley Levi was the youngest of the children of James A. and Lyda Ann Worley Sewell. He was born at Buchanan, a small village near Carrollton, Georgia, on July 20, 1895. He attended the public schools there, but while still in High School moved with his parents to Atlanta, Georgia, where despite the fact that he was still of high school age, having had the benefit of a private tutor ad interim he entered Emory College, the forerunner of the University of the same name in Atlanta, the following September.

When he was aged 22, World War I burst upon our country and he entered the service as a private, being assigned to the 42nd (Rainbow) Division, as a private, and was trained at Camp Gordon, Georgia, afterwards going with the American Expeditionary Forces to France, and serving with that Division all through the war, in the battles of St. Mihiel, Chateau-Thierry, and the Argonne.

Returning to the States from St. Nazaire, he was mustered out at Camp Gordon, March 1919.

But I'm getting ahead of my story — before entering the service he did not neglect to transact a very important piece of business, a deal with Miss Mary Frances Gresham, of Atlanta, by the terms of which she accepted him as her life partner, “for better or worse, for richer or for poorer, in sickness or in health, till death do us part.”

The partnership still happily exists, for better not for worse, for richer not for poorer, in health and not in sickness, to all appearances.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. F. Yarbrough, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Gresham, in Atlanta, October 18, 1917.

In 1920 they moved to West Palm Beach, Florida, where Worley established the Sewell Hardware Company, and by close attention to business and wise management, he has built the business into one of the most important on the East Coast of Florida.

They have four children: two sons and two daughters, and eight grandchildren.

The oldest son and child, Worley Levi Sewell, Junior, was born in College Park, Georgia, February 27, 1920 and served in France in World War II as Commanding Officer, 3rd Battalion, 277th Infantry Regiment, 69th Infantry Division, 5th Corps, First Army under General Hodges.

On April 25, 1944, he was united in marriage to Miss Frances Heard, of Orlando, Florida. She was born October 20, 1921.

They have two children: Worley Levi III, born September 4, 1948; William Heard, born February 22, 1951.

Worley is junior partner in the firm of Sewell Hardware Company and a popular and successful young man of West Palm Beach.

James Anderson was born at College Park, Georgia, April 12, 1923. He graduated in medicine at University of Maryland, and at present time is taking a post graduate course in Baltimore, Maryland. He served in the Army Medical Corps in World War II, at a base hospital in Kyoto, Japan.

James married Miss Elizabeth Nixon, of Chattanooga, Tennessee, on April 25, 1947. She was born June 25, 1923.

They have four girls:

Amy Nixon and Ann Gresham, twins, born on July 25, 1948

Elizabeth Nalley, born December 26, 1950

Frances Gresham, born Nov. 2, 1954.

Mary Ann, born at West Palm Beach, Florida, on June 26, 1928, was educated at University of Georgia.

She was married on March 20, 1950 to Elwood Sheetz Newton, Junior. He was born at Augusta, Georgia, on February 16, 1925. He was educated at the University of Georgia, and was in the United States Navy during World War II.

They have one son and one daughter:

Elwood Sheetz Newton III, born August 20, 1951

Mary Dantz Newton, born Dec. 3, 1954.

Elwood is associated with the Sewell Hardware organization as a Branch Manager.

Frances Sewell, born at West Palm Beach, Florida, on May 7, 1930, graduated from the University of Georgia.

Frances married Harold Chappell Brown, on August 30, 1952. He was born June 12, 1928, at Americus Georgia, is a graduate of University of Georgia and Georgia Military Academy. He served with the United States Army, September 1951-1953 in the Korean War. He is associated with the Sewell Hardware Company.

OTHER INFORMATION FROM NORFOLK COUNTY, VIRGINIA

In addition to information concerning the Sewell family in Virginia, we are indebted to Mrs. Elizabeth Wingo, 512 Graydon Park, Norfolk, Virginia, for some valuable research as follows:

June 30, 1953:

"It seems probable that Henry Sewell was born in England, but there seems to be no record of his arrival in Hatten, or Greer's Early Settlers. The Fry and Jefferson Map of 1751 is interesting. On it is 'Sewell's Point.'

"McIntosh's has no abstracts of Sewell wills 1637-1750. In Volume I, page 76, 1680-1691, John White wills to each John and Mary Sewell a cow. In Volume II, page torn, 1743-1750, John Nicholas, Senior, names among his heirs, his daughter, Alice Seawell, and his daughter, Sarah Sewell.

"Henry Sewell, whose will is recorded in Annapolis, Maryland, in 1665, was Provincial Secretary 1661-1665. His widow later married the third Lord Baltimore.

"One reference states Henry Sewell, Senior, had two daughters, one who married George Newton."

July 10, 1953:

"I was amazed not to find a single reference to the 'Sewells' when I checked the General Indices to Deeds, 1637-1836. Not finding references to the Sewells, I checked for Lemuel and Ann Mason. In 1674 they sell property which she had heired from her brother, Henry Sewell. To date I have found three references to Henry Sewell, I, his son Henry, and daughter Ann Mason, including the deposition of 1662.

"Did Henry Sewell I have two sons, both named Henry? Henry, the Younger, is said to have died in 1672, without issue." (Correct, W.L.S.)

"One of the Norfolk Historians says Thomas Seawell who patented lands in York County in 1635, and in Gloucester in 1642, was a brother of 'Henry of Sewell's Point.'

"I could not find the Port Entries in Norfolk Co., the very old Minute Book, is not indexed.

"Sewell's Point is referred to in 1739; bids for building on Sewell's Point in 1771; barns, buildings, etc., burned there in 1775; John Sewell in 1769; Samuel Sewell in 1775; Thomas Sewell in 1777.

"Henry Sewell I, is said to have had 150 acres of land. It might be well to check to see if Lemuel and Anne disposed of his entire acreage. There is no reference to a Joshua Sewell in either Norfolk County or in Dr. Swen's Index."

August, 1953:

"According to a certain family history, not certified, Henry Sewell was a burgess of 'Elizabeth Cittie County,' in 1632, which would place him here before either Thomas or John Seawell."

September 12, 1953:

"Orders, Wills, etc. Lewis Conner sold to Robert Tucker, merchant, the land and plantation whereon he now lives, situated at Sewell's Point, containing 680 acres, given him by the last will of John Fletcher, decd., also tract of 160 acres, adjoining, which he lately bought of Thomas Wishard x x for 300 pounds. 1720.

"Col. Samuel Boush was later in possession of the property for in 1740 one John Dunn states he 'rented the said property from Colonel Bush for 7 years,' which was 'commonly called and known by the name of Sewell's Point'."

September, 1953:

"After checking I finally found that a Captain William Tucker patented 620 acres of land, on December 6, 1620 at what is now 'Sewell's Point.'

"In 1661, Norfolk County Records, Portsmouth, Virginia, show that Henry Sewell, the elder, merchant, did in his lifetime give good and valuable considerations to Captain John Sibley, to clear, build and plant upon one parcel of the 650 acres of Land, called or known by the name of Sewell's Point, (rent?) One hundred and fifty acres, or thereabouts, lying in breadth from the Point upon Elizabeth River, South and running into the woods for length East, and joining upon the land then in use by Captain John Sibley, West; and enjoyed the same quietly and in peace until his death, . . . 'Now know, Captain Trennaman and Elizabeth his wife, as well for ye considerations . . . to us in hand paid by those present, grant, sell and sett over and also confirm unto Henery Sewell, sonne & heire of the sd. Henery Sewell deceased, All ye tract or dividend of land called by ye name of Sewell's Point and situate lying and being as above mentioned, viz., all ye buildings, orchards, privileges and appurtenances whatsoever thereunto belonging, and in full and ample amount as we ye sd Captain Trennaman, or Elizabeth my wife, might have enjoyed ye same by virtue afsd. therefore sd. pattent or any other . . . whatsoever, and unto his heirs forever buildings and . . . ye King's rent which shall or may appear, for or rendering the same, to have and to hold unto him ye sd Henery Sewell and his heirs forever. For virtue whereof we have hereunto put our hands and seals, this fourth day of December 1661 and in the thirteenth year of ye reign of our Lord and King Charles the Second. (Signed with seals, Benjamin Trenneman, Elizabeth Trenneman.' "

DERIVATION OF THE NAME SEWELL

“SEWELL”. A Teutonic word. Old English sig, Old High German, sig. Gothic, sigis and means victory. The word is found in the old English writers, Wold, waeld, weald, wold, woodland. The woods where a victory was won, in some of the many fights in the time of the making and conquest of England. The weald in the southern part of England, the remains of the great woods that covered that part of the country still retains that name. Sig or sigi means in all Teutonic languages conquest, and is found in combination with other words to form surnames. The warrior was the man of worth. Odin was called Sig fadier, or conquering father.

There are several Sewell post offices in the United States. Sowell has been the Virginia pronunciation time out of mind, for the family name, and for the point at the mouth of the Elizabeth river. Sowell is found on Jefferson and Fry's Map of Virginia, in Jefferson's "Notes on Virginia," in Hening's "Statutes at Large." The name Sowell is in the Richmond directory and belongs to people in Fluvanna. Sewall is the New England form of the name, and was borne by one of the witchcraft judges. It is in the London Post-office Directory for 1901, Sewell, forty names, but no Seawell nor Sewall. The first syllable has no connection with "Ocean Sea," nor the last syllable any connection with "wall" (vallum), nor with "well," a place where water comes out of the ground.

We are deeply indebted to Mrs. Elizabeth Wingo for her very full and valuable additions to our history.

ADDITIONAL GEORGIA INFORMATION

Excerpts from the "First Hundred Years," by Temple, give us much information concerning the Sewells in Georgia, especially in Cobb County, and a few more names on gravestones, not recorded elsewhere in this narrative.

Chapter 6, Pioneer Families, page 49.

Several members of the Allgood family lived in Walton County, Edward Allgood living in Parks District in that county, where he drew land in the lottery. George Baber came from Gwinnett, and there were members of this family also in Hall. The Baggetts were from Campbell County, while Absalom Baker evidently came into Cobb from DeKalb, later Fulton County. This family probably moved down from Franklin, as the name shows in the records of that county in 1800. Absalom Baker was the son of William Baker, and married Elizabeth Kennedy, their children being Mary Ann, who married John Sewell; Lizzie, married Peyton Peacock; Margaret married David K. Love; Camilla, married W. H. Winters; Emma married G. M. Griffith; Vianna, married Clement Howell; and Thomas married Cordelia Howell, daughter of Burdine Howell.

William Mayes, who settled near the Marietta-Roswell Road in Cobb, married Elizabeth Thomas, the marriage license, dated April 6, 1813, being in the Franklin County Documents. Their children were Eliza Evelina, married Asbury Hargrove; Nancy Sidney, married James Watson; Peggy Minerva, married Jesse Gober, half-brother of Mrs. George Wisdom Gober; Polly Polona, married James Pickens; Athalena Elizabeth, married in 1847 Thomas A. Gober; Sylvania Emeline, married Henry Kemp, Terrece Cordelia, married Isaac Sewell; Martha Jane, married Columbus Sewell, brother of Isaac and son of Samuel Sewell; Elsey Arsena, married Virgil Hamby, son of David Hamby; and two children died in infancy, Cynthia Ann and John Calvin Mayes, the latter so named because the family were such staunch Presbyterians.

Isaac Howell, whose daughter married R. N. Pittman, was a pioneer settler in Cobb and the brother of the late Evan P. Howell, of Atlanta. He married Margaret Tucker, and their children were Holten; Posey, married Eugenia Blanchard; Austin, married Nancy Sewell; Burdine married Jane Sewell; Clement married Vianna Baker, daughter of Absalom Baker, a pioneer settler who lived not far from the Howells; Mikw married Elizabeth Redwine; Mary Ann already mentioned; Jessie, married James Foster; and Melinda. The Howells and Pittmans lived in the southern part of the county in the vicinity of the Chattahoochee River. The Howell property, near Garrett's Bridge, is now owned by Mrs. Hampton Howell, the daughter of R. N. Pittman. The adjoining Pittman property is owned by Mrs. Hattie Pittman Parish, daughter of Allison Pittman.

Isaac Sewell came to Cobb from Meriwether County in 1835. He was the son of Samuel Sewell and Christian White. Samuel Sewell lived in Franklin, as did other of this family where the name was well known for years. Greenberry's name appears in the Franklin County records in 1807; Henry Sewell's in 1800; and John Sewell's in 1811. The lottery list shows Greenberry Sewell, Jr., and Sr., of Sewell's District, Franklin; Joshua, Nicholas, Samuel, and William Sewell of Franklin; Jacob and James L. Sewell of Morgan drawing in the new counties, while Nicholas Sewell of Morgan, drew in the 19th District, 2nd section.

Samuel Sewell died in 1815 and the Franklin County records show that in that year James Sewell, his son, was made guardian of the two youngest sons, Isaac and Samuel, minors. James Sewell moved to Meriwether, and from that county Isaac came to Cobb, having married Louisa Lowe in 1828.

Their children were Sarah, married Bab Johnston and later moved to Texas; Mary, married James Strickland, later moved to Atlanta; Parks, married Amanda Thomas and continued to live in Cobb, near the Chattahoochee River; Frances, married Robert B. Garwood, and lived in Cobb for some years, later moving to Canton; James, married Martha, sister of Robert Garwood, and later moved to Atlanta; William, married a Miss Gober and moved to Atlanta, where he practiced medicine.

Merchants who established stores before 1840 in Marietta were Moses Denman, Thomas Payne, E. W. Mobley, John G. Holland, Hubble & Knot, Sewell and Winfrey, Crawford Tucker, E. A. Fraser, and William Root, whose drug store was the first in town.

Page 101, Chapter 8, "Development of Transportation, Removal of the Cherokee Indians."

The first grading for the railroad near Marietta was done by a Cobb County firm, Sewell and Ruff, and no sooner was it completed than the smooth stretch presented itself to the youth of the town as an ideal race course. Almost every boy who owned horses gathered at the present site of the railroad station to race. After the rails were laid this feature of life in Marietta was no longer possible.

On this page Temple says, "There was a crying need for more roads all over the Cherokee country. The pioneer's method of cutting down the trees and trusting to vehicular traffic to define the route no longer sufficed for main thoroughfares. The progress of the times demanded an improved road surface. The year 1850 found two companies organized with the hope of building better roads through Cobb and into adjoining counties." One group of men formed the Marietta Turnpike and Plank Road Company; another group formed the Cobb County and Alabama Turnpike Company. Isaac Sewell is listed with twenty-nine others as having organized this latter Company. The other names do not concern our Sewell history.

Chapter 13, "Schools," page 177.

The Kennesaw Female Seminary, conducted under the auspices of St. James Episcopal Church, was one of the best known schools in the county. This was opened in 1845 and a building was erected the following year on what is now Polk Street. The site of this school has already been mentioned as having been bought from George D. Rice in March 1844. Mary Sewell was one among many who attended the Seminary some time before July 1848.

Chapter 5, page 507, "Notes."

Temple mentions that Mrs. J. Dan Anderson, formerly Mary Lou Garwood, was representative of her grandfather, Isaac Sewell, at Cobb County's centennial in 1933.

Data on page 75 was obtained from lottery lists and from Mrs. James Petty, Jr., (Granddaughter of Robert B. Garwood and Frances Sewell. Frances Sewell was daughter of James Sewell, and granddaughter of Samuel Sewell.)

Chapter 14, page 534, "Notes."

In the 1851 Tax Digest, Isaac Sewell is listed as having 1,025 acres and owning 13 slaves. He was in 898th District.

Chapter 14, page 536, "Notes."

In the 1851 Tax Digest, Samuel Sewell is listed as having 280 acres and owning 8 slaves. He was in 897th District.

The Confederate Guards, Co. D, 7th Georgia, as far as I know was the first company which left Cobb County for the war. They left Powder Springs on the night of May 31, 1861. (Southern Confederacy, June 1, 1861.) The muster roll as found in the Roster Commission, listed WILLIAM M. SEWELL.

ALABAMA RECORDS OF SEWELLS

On pages III and IV of our Genealogical lists, a complete list of the children of John Asberry (or Asbury) Sewell is given, with the names of his two wives.

On June 30, 1894, Hannah Sewell, widow of J. A. Sewell, filed a petition for Dower, wherein she asks for a life estate in all lands and personal property of which he was possessed at death. She lists his heirs as "fifteen children and three grandchildren," who are the only heirs at law of the deceased.

She lists them as follows:

Levi F. Sewell, son, Carolton, Georgia (Town name spelled wrong)

John R. Sewell, son, Cedar Bluff, Alabama

Mary E. Watson, daughter, wife of Tolberry Watson, Blackland, Cherokee County, Alabama

Ophelia C. Watson, daughter of A. Watson, Maple Grove, Ala.

M. N. Sewell, son, residence Maple Grove, Cherokee County, Ala.

W. E. Sewell, son, residence Maple Grove, Cherokee County, Ala.

Elma Sanders, age 18 years, (grand-minor)

Erma Sanders, age 16 years, sister of above, daughters of deceased wife of
B. C. Sanders, Sarah D. Sanders, Roscoe, Georgia

G. W. Sewell, son, residence, Centre, Cherokee County, Ala.

J. H. Sewell, son, residence, Gainesville, Georgia

Harriett, daughter, wife of John Bryan, Maple Grove, Ala.

Charles T. Sewell, son, residence, Lodi, Georgia

Anna Roberson, minor 13 years old, grand-daughter, daughter of V. J.
Roberson, decd. wife of Jno. A. Roberson, non-residence, P.O. unknown

R. M. Sewell, son, residence, Maple Grove, Alabama

Julia E. Thornton, a daughter of S. N. Thornton, residence, Elmont, Texas

M. A. Sewell, son, residence, Centre, Cherokee County, Alabama

Addie R. Sewell, age 17 years, and Donna D. Sewell, age 11 years, minors, daughters of decd. residence, Centre, Cherokee County, Alabama

Hannah Sewell further states that her husband died possessed of the following property:

"The SE $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 29, all that part of NE $\frac{1}{4}$ of SW $\frac{1}{4}$ of said Sec. 29, lying South of public road leading from Garrett's Ferry to Maple Grove, Ala., and the NE $\frac{1}{4}$ sec. 32, and all that part portion of S.E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of NE $\frac{1}{4}$ lying North of and joining Coosa River, and lying South and joining said NE $\frac{1}{4}$ of NE $\frac{1}{4}$ in said Sec. 32. All in T 10, R 9, East, all in Cherokee County, Alabama."

Hannah Sewell states "There is about two hundred thirty acres of said lands and worth about two thousands and five hundred dollars."

Land Office records show the following Sewells, as having taken out grants in Alabama. 1838, John Sewell, Randolph Co., Mardiville, Ala. 1856, Milton Sewell, Centre, Alabama. 1860, Pleasant Sewell, Calhoun County, Alabama. 1851, 1854, and 1855, Rebecca Sewell, took out three grants, the first at Lebanon, Ala., the last two at Huntsville, Alabama.

THE MIAMI SEWELLS

On the 14th day of November, 1893, Jeremiah W. Sewell, of County of Osceola, State of Florida, died, leaving an inheritance of a $1000. life insurance, and other personal property valued at $1000. more. Herbert Sewell, son of Jeremiah, applied for letters of Administration which were granted. Heirs were listed as Mary Albina, wife, Herbert, John, Jeremiah, and E. G. Sewell, sons.

John Sewell had first store in Miami, Florida.

E. G. Sewell was first Mayor of Miami, both came there from Kissimmee, Florida. They were brought to Kissimmee by their parents when children. John and E. G. Sewell walked from Kissimmee to Titusville and got jobs with the Florida East Coast Railway, then building to Miami. They worked on until they reached Miami, where they arrived before the city was incorporated, secured property for themselves, and became one of the most influential of all Miami pioneer families.

LINE OF THE PALM BEACH SEWELLS - JOHN ASBURY SEWELL

John Asberry Sewell was born in Franklin County, Georgia on January 20, 1820, the son of John and Mary Richmond Sewell. He was married twice. The first wife was Martha N. Polk, said to have been a relative of President James K. Polk. They were married November 2, 1839. Martha was born on March 5, 1824, hence was only fourteen years, four months, and three days old when they were married. She died on July 30, 1864, at age of 40. She became in that brief span the mother of eight sons and five daughters, whose names appear below:

JOHN ASBERRY SEWELL & HANNAH NASH MORGAN

LINE OF PALM BEACH SEWELLS SECOND WIFE.

John Asberry Sewell buried his first wife, Martha Polk Sewell in 1864, and one year later, on October 3, 1865, he took another, the widow Morgan, whose husband had died January 18, 1864. Hannah Nash Sewell, born August 28, 1840, bore John Asberry Sewell eight children, four sons and four daughters, which with two children by the deceased Morgan, Barto and Mattie (or Mattis) gave her ten children of her own, and thirteen of Martha and John Asberry's to rear, but she proved equal to the task, as sixteen of the twenty three lived to be grown.

John Asberry was a man of great fairness and said that he thought it only fair that his second wife should have as many as the first, but it is small wonder that with twenty three to look after already, Hannah was well content to let it go at that.

John Asberry also was known as a man of peace. Doubtless, he had a great deal of practice in keeping peace at home between twenty three youngsters, when Martha would call to him, " Your children and my children are fighting our children," but he was evidently very successful as from all accounts it was a " big,happy family."

The following were the children of John Asberry and Hannah Nash Morgan Sewell:

JOHN ASBERRY SEWELL IN ALABAMA

John Asberry Sewell and wife went to Cherokee County, Alabama, near the town of Center, Alabama, prior to 1838, and established a home and plantation in that new country known as " the Indian lands" which had just been opened to settlers, and there both of them died and are buried in the cemetery of the Sewell family on his farm.

He prospered and became a large land owner, and an influential man in his community.

He volunteered to serve as a private in the Confederate Army in 1861, and was enrolled in the company of Captain Harris, Company D, Second Georgia Infantry. He served until near the end of the great, fratricidal struggle, when he was discharged from the hospital at Richmond, by reason of disability, in 1864. A detail of his war record is shown elsewhere in a separate chapter, with other Sewell Confederate records.

In 1894 he was put to rest, the most outstanding member of the Sewell family up until that time, and his like has not been seen since.

| Born, 11-21-1886 | Ellen Sewell, married July 23, 1893, Wm. M. Johnson, born - 28-1868, died 10-25-1929 |
| Born, 11-26-1881 Died, 9-20-1953 | Shelly Sewell, married 1-8-1953 Annie (Anna) Dwedell, born 8-26-1882, died, 5-25-1949 |

Levi Sewell was born on the " old Sewell farm" about half a mile west of Rosco, Georgia, Coweta County. Soon after his birth, his father, Asberry Sewell, moved to Cherokee County, Alabama, where he grew up. His story of the journey from Coweta County, across into Cherokee County, Alabama, and subsequent experiences, will be found elsewhere in this history.

The only grave found on John Asberry farm in Alabama. His remains rest there under a mound of stones. His wife, Hannah, is at Shady Grove Baptist Church grave yard two miles beyond.

The Baker-Sewell cemetery lot, Enochville, North Carolina, in which Samuel Sewell, Sr. and wife, Elizabeth are said to rest. The native head stone has no inscription.

Green B. and Winefred are at Hudson River Baptist Church grounds in Banks County, Ga.

These old people are buried on the old Sewell place on the Severn River at Sewell's Point. The old homestead is in Anne Arundel County at head of the Severn River. Warfield founders of Anne Arundel and Howard Counties makes a statement that seven generations of Sewells sleep in Anne Arundel County.

The Mayes-Sewell family plat is located out from Marieta, Georgia. Isaac and wife, Terrece, rest there.

The original Sewell homestead near Indian Landing at head of Severn River, Anne Arundel County, Maryland has been in possession of family since 1673, and is still owned by descendants of the Sewell.

The story and half addition is comparatively new, although the original two story building is adjacent to it and is of log construction, but later improved in appearance to architecturally conform to the new addition.

THE SEWALL PAPERS

SEWALLS OF CARTHAGE, MOORE COUNTY, NORTH CAROLINA

Some of the Sewells living in the southeastern part of Virginia along the coast, and in some North Carolina counties, as Wake, and Moore, spell their surname, SEAWELL, but according to a statement received from Mrs. Josie S. Daniels, Faison, North Carolina, the spelling was originally Sewell, the same as ours, and sometimes Sowell. We know this to be true, as I have several times come across these variations of spelling of the surname in searching through family history. Mrs. Daniel's story is so interesting that I am quoting it in part, as follows:

" My father, Dr. Virgil Newton Seawell, told me years ago, that our name in the ' way back ages' was spelled Sewell and Sowell.

" Our folks are supposed to have been descendants of the ten brothers (Seawell) who landed at Seawell's Point, Virginia, in the 1600s ... the reason of change of name spelling was because King James III confiscated land in England and would not release (same) until those to whom the land belonged returned to England and changed the way of spelling the name. In the middle 1700s the name was spelled Sowell . . . in an effort to get the Scotch to pronounce it So-well, but imagine their disgust when the Scotch said Sow-(female swine)ell. Joseph Sewell of Elkridge, Maryland came through North Carolina, 1776 from Pennsylvania to Alabama, heard of the Scotch pronunciation, so said, ' We of the close kindred will spell our name Seawell and pronounce it that way'.. but of course, only since World War II has it been pronounced See-well very often. In 1912 when my father and I went to Alexander City, Alabama to see our distant cousins there, cousin Richard Ivey told me that ' because we do not spell the name alike, is not any reason that we aren't any kin, for we are, and our folks a generation ago were closer than we are.' "

Sewell Papers. Land Grant Frauds - Lottery System.

Our narrative mentions the fact that there were Land Grant Frauds under the headright system. All Georgia counties created before 1802 were known as " head-right" counties, including the one where many Sewells held land-- Franklin County. Millions of acres that did not exist were granted under the Land Grant Frauds. In 1934, recounting this system, the Lavonia Times & Gauge, Lavonia Georgia, remarked " A Dark Page in the County's History is Still in the Dark for Many Historians. Nothing Ever Done About It and very little Said About It." After 1785 the head-right system was abolished and the lottery system came in. Following is a list of Sewell family forerunners who received land under each system.

Marriage Bond - Orange County

Christopher Sewell, to Zelpha Sears, Bondsman Luke Guess-- James R.
14 Nov. 1766 (?) Gattis, Geo. Laws,

It is not known whether or not Christopher went into another county for his bride, or perhaps Orange County was later made from Rowan.

Military Records:

SEWELL FAMILY RECORDS - TENNESSEE

From Bob Love, Box 1013, North Station, Arlington, Va.

A search of the census records for North Carolina, Rowan Co., reveals that the Sewells disappeared from Rowan County after the second census in 1800. Joseph and Elizabeth were the only two in that county in 1790 census. They were heads of separate households. Joseph was the one who died in Tennessee, most likely.

The County office of the Clerk of the Court, Columbia, Tenn., shows the following marriage record:

Joseph Sewell to Elizabeth Stone, 11 February 1809
Curtis Wood and John Goforth gave bond for $1250. for marriage of Curtis Wood to Peggy Sewell, 20 June 1805

Livingston Sewell to Mary Dunger, Jan. 31, 1837

Last will and testament of Henry Sewell, father of Samuel, Sr., who leaves him all his wearing apparel.

Sewell Place

After the Indians were driven from Northeast Georgia in 1873, this territory was made into a County by the Georgia Legislature and named Franklin County. John Clark surveyed and platted a tract of land on the east side of Broad River and secured a grant of land to it from the state of Georgia in 1785 while Jared Irwin was Governor. This tract of land became known as the Sewell Place. John Clark sold this land to Samuel Sewell in 1804, although he actually arrived in Georgia in 1785. Samuel sold to his son, Joshua in 1810. Joshua sold to his son, Joshua L. in 1838. In 1848 Joshua L. sold to his son, Charles Sewell and Charles sold to his daughter, Sara Mc Farland in 1875. Samuel was the first Sewell to settle in Franklin County.

The remains of Rev. Samuel Sewell and wife, Sarah are located in Mayes-Sewell family plat about six miles from Marietta, Cobb County, Ga.

Joshua and Nancy are in Sewell family grave yard a few miles out from Cumming, Georgia, in Forsyth County.

MISCELLANEOUS SEWELL DEEDS

September 25, 1792, Charles Sewall of Charles County, Maryland, transferred to John Mackall a tract or parcel of land lying and being in Franklin County, Georgia. This Deed, recorded 6th Sept. 1795, Book H. page 146, B was sealed, signed and delivered in the presence of Geo. Naylor and Jesse Douglas. The deed does not give a full description of the property. It was granted to Charles Sewall under the "Headright System," in 1788 and contained 1,000 acres, for which John Makall (or Mackall) paid Charles Sewall One Hundred fifteen pounds lawfull money, being the Consideration mentioned. Charles Sewall receipted for the money and signed the deed, warranting the property in Georgia to John Makall, his heirs and assigns forever.

Recorded April 12, 1796.

From this time forward, Lewis Sewell, " Merchant," seems to have been engaged in real estate ventures for some years, as shown by numerous copies of deeds, furnished by various County records in the State of Georgia, after he purchased the Charles Sewall (or Sewell) tract of 1,000 acres more or less, which was a " Headright Grant", lost by Charles in a tax sale.

WILLS OF THE SEWELL FAMILIES

We naturally proceed from the story of land acquired by members of the Sewell families, to an analysis of whatever wills have been made available to us through the records of various persons and Courts.

The Will of Henry Sewell, of Anne Arundel County, Maryland, 1726, is recorded in full in early pages of the narrative of our history. It is dated 29 April, "one Thousand and Twenty six," which should have been 1726. He appoints his wife, and his two sons, Henry and Samuel, his sole executors.

The Will of Samuel Sewell, is registered in Will Book D, pages 73-76, Rowan County, North Carolina. Signed and Sealed, April 6, 1879. Bequests are given to his beloved wife, Elizabeth, and to each of his children. It is quoted in full in the narrative.

The Will of James Warner, is also quoted in full in the narrative concerning the early years of the Sewells in America, as his daughter married Henry Sewell, about 1672 or 1673.

Will of Absalom Baker, probated in 1777, dated May 1775, Will Book A, pages 228-229, Rowan County, North Carolina, "Benjn" Baker sole Exctr.: gives his wife all personable goods with household goods, other legacies excepted; Christopher Baker, 1 sorrel horse, Joshua Baker, 1 black horse; 1 shilling each to John and Benjamin Baker; "Granson" Baker, son of Margrett, 1 hourse or "mair" worth ten pounds; Sons Samuel and Greenbury Baker, to divide equally all lands and tenements. Witnessed by John Fifer, Jason Frissell, Martin Fifer.

Will of Benjamin Baker, Franklin County, Georgia, 10 December 1815, Recorded 82-A, gives his wife, "Cumfort Baker," the home and all personal property, except 2 feather beds and Furniture which are to go to his son Benjamin Baker at her death; gives John Baker, son, 140 acres of land on Little Rice Creek, called Lowry Tract; Elbert Tract to go to pay debts of Estate; daughter Jane to receive one feather bed at marriage or sooner; daughter Ornor one feather bed and furniture at marriage or sooner; other children having been given equal proportions of Estate their claims are quieted by this will. Christopher Baker and Fred Beall, sole executors. (In a long list of possessions valued at a few hundred dollars, the most unusual item is " I Keg Ground Ginger, $ 4.00 "

Will of Samuel Sewell, Junior, Dated February 15, 1815. Gives his beloved wife, " Christain" half of home place after sons, James and Nicholas have their part, also the negro girl; daughter, Mary other half of land, also $100 in notes or money; gives James and John each a tract of land, and Nicholas the land whereon he is living, also note on Wm. and Christopher Baker, $ 73. and $52 in Trade. Daughter Rachel, 200 acres of land; gives each of his sons Samuel and Isaac a horse, a gun, $20. in notes, and half the land joining on Benjamin Baker and Edmund Strange. Franklin County, Ga. Book 1814-1823, page 18a 19 and 19a. Appraised at $ 1,098.31½

Will of Joseph Sewell, Recorded Maury County, Columbia Tennessee, Will Book E, page 494. Gives his beloved wife, Elizabeth Sewell one Negro woman, Nancy, and her increase, 1 feather bed and furniture, 1 " sorel mare cal'd Jinny", side saddle and bridle, household furniture necessary for her convenience, her choice of cow and calf, six head of sheep, 1 sow and pigs, (choice of stock) and 1 Bureau. Recorded May 17, 1832.

Will of Benjamin Plaster, son of John Plaster, Rowan County, N.C., born about 1780, in Rowan County, died Nov. 25, 1836 in DeKalb Co., Georgia. Will recorded, Book of Wills, page 20, Book I, 2nd will recorded, Court House, Decatur, Georgia. Benjamin was the son of John Plaster and his first wife. In John Plaster's will, Rowan County, Feb. 1, 1811, he mentions sons Joseph, Thomas, Joshua, John and Benjamin for whom he had already provided; then mentions his youngest children, (probably by second wife, Susanna) Molly, Andrew, Catherine, and Margaret. Benjamin married Oct. 10, 1802, Sarah Sewell, daughter of Samuel Sewell. Soon after marriage they went to Franklin County, Georgia, where several of Sarah's brothers were; being among the first settlers there. Later Benjamin and Sarah moved to DeKalb County, Ga., to settle and there they lived and died. While in Franklin County, Georgia, Benjamin was commissioned Lieut. of the 210th District, Georgia Militia on August 27, 1810.

(Above from Mrs. E.G.Powell amd Mrs. W.A.Powell, 37-6th Ave., San Francisco, 18, Calif., whose father is Dr. Newton N. Gober, Marietta, Ga., and who is a descendant of Benjamin and Sarah Plaster.) Mentioned: Sarah, daughter, married John Williamson, left daughter Sally; Dovey, married a Daniel, Edwin, Benjamin, Elizabeth, married John Appling Gober; Piety married James Arendall Gober, brother of John.

Green Berry Sewell, January 30, 1846. Carroll County, Georgia, Son, Alexander Sewell, Executor. Leaves homestead No. 166, Dist. 10, Carroll County, Land to go after death of both parents to sons, Franklin and William. Wife to have use of homestead while she lives. Alexander, son, to have land in Paulding County, near Cedartown; son Clark to have lot of land in Cherokee County; children who are not married to have equal part with those who are married heretofore, or if any should never marry, equal part with the rest. At wife's death, stock to remain on home farm to be managed by sons William and Franklin, also other possessions necessary to the use of the farm. If children can not agree, all to be sold and divided equally after death of both parents.

Will of James Sewell, Senr. - Will Book A, Pages 157, 158, Meriwether County, Greenville, Georgia. Sept. 28, 1852
Surviving children of son Joshua Sewell, $50. each. To grandchildren, Margaret Ann Freeman, Joel Holcomb, James and Mary Holcomb, $50. each, Joseph Sewell, trustee for last 3 named; 3 grandchildren, James H. Wideman, Emily H. Lee, Martha H. Rosser, $50. each. To children, Joseph Sewell, Piety Gober, Richard J. Sewell, Lavina K. Blaylock, Margaret H. Colquitt, and children of son, James H. Sewell, residue after payment of all just debts.

Will of James L. Sewell, Will Book B, pages 266-267, Greenville, Georgia, Meriwether County. October 7, 1858. Gives beloved wife, Elizabeth, all effects both real and personal for ten years; in case she should marry, equal distribution to be made among heirs. Each child to receive upon coming of age, $200. Executors asked to give children all advantages of schools in keeping with effects in hand; not conflicting with other provisions of will. Son James Lee, in view of his affliction, to have two years schooling above the other heirs. John R. and Richard J. Sewell, Jr., Executors, authorized to sell land now owned and buy other if to the best interest of the family, with consent of wife, Elizabeth.

Will of James Sewell, Will Book B, Page 9, Meriwether Co., Greenville, Georgia. 15, May, 1858. Gives wife, Nancy, all the property that came to him with her, also bedding, and one half she has or may make, with her side saddle, and $100. cash forever. Also $500. of estate to procure a comfortable home for her during her life, investment to be made by Executors with wife's approval; also, negro girl named Elisa, to be exchanged for other property if she becomes inefficient. Also $1,000. to be kept at interest for wife, during lifetime or widowhood; to be returned to estate with Negro girl, Elisa, if wife marries again, and equally divided among children. Residue, after just debts are paid, to be divided equally between children: Nancy Prickett, William Sewell, John P. Sewell, Sarah A. Foye, James L. Sewell and Elizabeth M. Barnes. Property of Sarah A. Foye to go at her death to her children. James L. Sewell, Trustee for them. John P. Sewell and William B. Smith, Executors, may at their discretion, sell the property and divide the money in accordance with the will.

Milton N. Sewell, Administrator of Estate of James Sewell, Coweta County, Georgia, 30th May, 1860 to 3rd February 1874, makes final return in part only, showing compromise settlement of six vouchers by direction of an order of the Court of Ordinary of said County, previously obtained.

Will of James H. Sewell, Will Book B, Page 44-45, Greenville, Georgia, Meriwether County. States that James H. Sewell, being of sound mind and disposing memory, and also being about to engage in the war with the United States and Confederate States of America, and being apprised of the great uncertainty of warfare desirous of disposing of the property which a Kind Providence has blessed him with, makes his last will and testament. He asks that his household and kitchen furniture be left with his beloved wife and child, wife Rosco P. Sewell to have the property for the use of herself and child, John M. Sewell. Wife to have the use of the property or the income from it during widowhood until death, or property to go to the son, John M. Sewell, if she marries again. When son, John M. Sewell is of age, if his mother remains a widow, she shall be entitled to one-half the income of the land. John P. Sewell, father of James H. Sewell, was appointed Executor. 11, March, 1862. " Confiding in him this sacred trust."

Will of John R. Sewell, Will Book B, Page 91, Greenville, Ga., Meriwether County, August 17, 1861. Being about to enter the service of the Confederate Army, and " being fully advised of the casualties and uncertainties of such warfare, " he requests that after all debts are paid, his mother, Elizabeth Sewell, shall receive or inherit all effects of which he may die possessed, and he appoints her his Executrix. Admitted to Record, 5th December, 1864.

Will of John Sewell, Banks County, Georgia, July 31, 1862. Greenbury and Richmond Sewell, sons, Executors, Probated Court of Ordinary, September Term, 1862. Provides that after just debts are paid, all property both real and personal wherever and whatever it may be, shall be sold and divided equally as follows: to sons Greenbury, Richmond, William, Francis, James Sewell's children, Marion Sewell, Milton N. Sewell, John A. Sewell, Pierce Sewell, each one part: to daughter Elizabeth Angeline and children, one part; to daughter Jane Hood and children, one part. Sons Greenbury and Richmond to be Executors.

Will of William Sewell, Will Book A, Pages 262-263, Greenville, Ga., Meriwether County. 26th day of January 1858. Gives his wife, Martha, use during her life, or widowhood, of Lot 105, Dist. 11, 202½ acres, more or less with all rights; also household and farm equipment, and stock, and one year's provisions. Also bequeaths a negro man, Sam, woman Frances, and her child. William J. Sewell, sone, 1 bed and bedding, 1 trunk or chest, one cow and calf, family Bible, 1 horse and saddle. All other property to be sold by executors and divided between his wife and children: Martha, wife, daughter Sarah E. Wagner and children, two sons, Jacob R. and William J. Sewell, each an equal part. If wife remarries, her share to be sold and divided equally among their three children. Jacob R. and Wm. J. Sewell, sons, Executors.

Will of Thomas W. Sewell, Hart County, Georgia. Will Book, page 141. 9th April, 1874. Appoints wife, Sarah Ann Sewell, her father, Gustaves Alewine, and brother-in-law, Thomas J. Winn, executors. Gives to wife, Sarah Ann Sewell, and three children, Lucy Eveline, Nancy Elizabeth, and Martha Victoria Sewell, the land where they now live, share and share alike; if wife dies or marries again before children are of age, children then living shall inherit, share and share alike. Wife shall give to each daughter who marries, such a percent or all of their share in estate, according to what she can reasonably afford. Property is described as 1 house, 6 head of cattle, 10 head of hogs, 9 sheep, and household and kitchen furnishings.

The will of William Mayes, Cobb County, Georgia, Deed Book R, p. 135, September 13, 1861: Gives his wife, Elizabeth Mayes, during her life time, Lots 1174, 1175, 1130, 1202, 1203, 1246, 1247, District 16, Sec. 2, Cobb County, 40 acres more or less in each lot, together with all improvements on the land, live stock included.

Also the slaves, Green, Dick, Bose, Jack, Israel, Eli, Levi, and Hagan, to be held during her natural life time and at her death to be equally divided between their daughters, Louisa A. Hargroves, Nancy S. Watson, Polly P. Pickens, Athlie E. Gober, Sylvania E. Kemp, Cordelia Sewell, and Mary P. Sewell. Also $100. in addition to $400. already in his wife's hands.

Elzie A. Mayes, her heirs and assigns forever to have a negro man, Tom, Mary Ann, his wife, and future issue and increase, also Rose, and her future issue.

Elzie A. Mayes, also was to share in "all above mentioned lots," and all real and personal estate to go to Elzie at her mother's death. Elzie to reside with her mother, and "enjoy" one half of net proceeds share and share alike with her mother. Tom and Mary Ann, to reside on the farm during his wife's life.

Martha Jane Sewell was to receive a negro girl, Murdes, and her future issue, "her heirs and assigns, forever." Also, Lots 1175, 1199, and 1200, Dist. 16, Sec. 2; forty acres or more each. (Lot 1175 was also listed with those to go to his wife and daughter Elzie.)

Another daughter, Theresa Cordelia Sewell, was to receive the negro girl, Juda and her future issue, "to have and to hold, her heirs and assigns forever. Also Lots 1176, 1177, 1201, southern half of lot 1129, 40 acres more or less each, except the half lot, 20 acres, Dist. 16, Sec. 2. "Her heirs and assigns forever."

Grand-daughter, Selina Gault, a negro girl Estell, and $150. out of "monies" to be collected by Executor.

Grand-son, Marion C. Gober, son of Jesse Lee Gober, $200. out of money collected.

Executor is asked to collect as soon as possible, all money due the estate, same to be divided among the daughters, share and share alike. Provides, if husbands of daughter owe money, the notes shall be given as part of their portion of inheritance but no interest charged thereon, balance of their shares to be paid in cash if any due.

There was to be no law suit concerning the will. Heirs are urged, if differences arise to refer them to "impartial and intelligent persons and what they shall order shall be binding and conclusive."

If a daughter dies without issue, her share shall be given to her sisters, divided equally among them: all property bequeathed to his married daughters is "vested in their husbands as trustees, to have and to hold in trust to and for the sole use of their wives, not subject to debt dues against the said husbands."

The Executor, son-in-law, Thomas A. Gober, is not to be held responsible for any loss of monies or Estates, which happen without his fault.

March 17, 1862 this will was filed for probate. It was recorded in Book R, page 135, Cobb County, Georgia Records.

This will is interesting because it shows how thoughtfully the plantation owners of the Old South, provided for their slaves to be kept and cared for.

Will of Elizabeth Anglin, Banks County, Dec. 8, 1886, provides that her three daughters, Francina, Uentoria, and Terressa Anglin, shall have the entire estate, both real and personal while they live; that married children, John S. William, and James R. Anglin, and Elizabeth Ward, wish to live on the land, it shall be a home for them during the lives of the three unmarried daughters; at the death of these three daughters, the estate to be sold and divided equally among all lawful heirs. W.J. Burgess and Henry S. Echols Executors.

Will filed for probate May 6, 1895.

Will of Nicholas Sewell, Recorded Will Book B, page 314, 14, Sept. 1867, Greenville, Georgia, Meriwether County. Makes bequests of furniture, live stock, the home place, and 202½ acres to 3 of his daughters, Lucy W., Mary M. and Syntha A. Sewell; to be used or disposed of as Lucy May shall see fit and proper. Balance to be divided between six other children, after taking into consideration what they have already received: Virginia C. Justice, Samuel H. Sewell, Elizabeth L. Humphries, Nancy E. Albright, Martha R. Wheelless, and Louisa B. Powledge. (Martha and Louisa had not received money.) John Albright and Lucy W. Sewell were named as Executors. Probated August Term of Court, 1881.

Will of Joseph Sewell, Nov. 18, 1885, Cobb County, Georgia, names Robert Demsey, and wife Sarah F. Sewell, Executors. Will signed Oct. 28, 1884, gives his wife, Sarah, all his property to hold and use for their heirs; at her death, if youngest child is of age, the property to be sold and divided equally among heirs, after debts, if any are paid. Children involved are not listed.

Will of William J. Sewell, Will Book B, pages 383, 384, Greenville, Meriwether County, Georgia. Probated at July Term of Court, 1887. Dated June 8, 1887. Gives his wife, Sarah, 202½ acres of land, Lot No. 55, 202½ acres of Lot —, 88½ acres Lot 54, 7 acres Lot 56, in Lone Oak District. 40 acres, Lot 31, Lutherville, 100 acres Lot 137, Dist. 11, parcels aggregating 640 acres. To be held and used for support of minor children: at death or remarriage of wife, to be equally divided among "now minor" children, Emmett and Bennie, sons, Jennie, Nellie and Arlena, daughters, and any other children who shall be born to him; lands to be theirs during their lifetime, and use or profit to go to their heirs at their death, pro rata. Upon marriage of any child, wife is to settle lands for use or benefit of such child, unless it interferes with support of the other heirs. If land is sold money is to be reinvested immediately, in other lands. Married daughter, Willie White, (husband William White) received 8 acres, Lot 57, 75 acres Lot 56, Lone Oak, Dist. to hold during her natural life. Any property not herein mentioned to go to the use of his wife and minor children, with all stock and personal property.

This will is interesting because it shows the predominant characteristic of the Sewell families, running throughout their history-- to get and keep, and to encourage their heirs to get and keep an abundant share of "the Good Earth," of their native land. Where ever a Sewell is found, there will be found progressive development of homes and business.

Will of Sarah Sewell, March 24, 1888, Cedartown, Polk County, Ga., Executors: Crofford P. Benj. T. and Collumbus Sewell, and Elizabeth P. Willingham, to serve without bond. Gives each child and grand child an equal share of estate at her death. C.P.Sewell, B.T.Sewell, C.M.Sewell, sons, daughter E.P.Willingham, one share each; children of son, John N. Sewell, Decd. one share; Thomas M. Treadaway, son of daughter, Fannie Treadaway, one share. Shares of grandchildren to be administered by Executors until minors are 21 years old. Share of Thomas Treadaway to be divided among other heirs if he dies before of age. If any of John Sewells children die before of age, their part to be divided among his other children; should all die, their share to be divided among other heirs of Sarah Sewell. Land and other property covered by this bequest is not listed.

Will of Catherine Sewell, Coweta County, Georgia, May 30, 1892. Andrew J. Sewell, Executor: Gives the following bequests of money, daughter Mary E. Gurley, nee Sewell and two daughters, Delisha Lang and Elizabeth Moore, $5. each making $10.; to daughter Nancy Clemontine Kersey nee Sewell, $10.; to son, William H.H.Sewell's son William J.R.Sewell, $10.; daughter, Martha J. Boon, nee Sewell, $10.; son James C. Sewell, $10., 1 feather bed, 1 pillow. Son, Richmond A. Sewell, $10. 1 feather bed, 1 pillow; son, Thomas A. Sewell, $10. 1 feather bed, 1 pillow. Daughter, Sarah F. Starr, nee Sewell, $10.; daughter, Georgia Ann O Sewell household furnishings, dishes, and 160 acres more or less of Lots Nos. 229,252,253, to hold for her use so long as she remains single, or lives. At her death, proceeds of sale of Georgia's share to be divided equally among other heirs named.

Will of Terrell R. Sewell, Cobb County, Georgia, May 8, 1895. Executors: sons, C.T. and W.A.Sewell. Gives his wife the use of property after just debts are paid. Asks the sons to see that all property is kept in good repair and cultivation for his wife, Mary Sewell and sufficient amount of proceeds to be given to her annually or oftener, to support her, any surplus to be held for Estate by Executors. At the death of wife each of two children, Mrs. Camilla Safford and Mrs. Lue Turner, to receive $5. each as full legacy. At death of wife, after paying two legacies above, remainder of Estate to be divided between seven children: Mary Jane Gann, Oscar Sewell, Will Sewell, Cora Sewell, Terry Sewell, Fred Sewell, and Clifford Sewell, share and share alike, without any sale, by themselves, or through intervention of disinterested persons if necessary. Should any one of 7 children die before division of property, share of that child shall go to his or her heirs; should any heir leave no child or children, his or her share to be divided equally among surviving heirs.

Will of Levi F. Sewell, Carroll County, Georgia. July 22, 1912.

Section 1. I wish my wife, Martha, at my death to have of my estate ($ 4000.00) Four thousand Dollars in cash or one half of said amount in bank stock if she prefers (Provided that I own that much bank stock at my death) If my wife elects to take in cash said $ 4000.00 I wish her to loan each of my children living Six hundred dollars at 8% per annum, provided they can use same to their advantage, but if my wife elects to take the bank stock, then to loan each child $300.00 at the same rate of interest 8%, said interest to be paid annually and for a failure to pay said interest annually, unless in case of death of said child or serious misfortune, they shall forfeit One hundred dollars of their pro rata share for each offense. At no time shall my wife loan to any of my children any amount greater than set out above. If my wife may need an amount greater than said interest, she may demand the principal or any part thereof from said children.

I wish my wife, Martha, to have all my household and kitchen furnishings.

I wish my wife annually to give each of my daughters and daughters-in-law a nice dress pattern provided her income will authorize same.

Section 2. I wish my son, Willis, to have at my death, One thousand dollars in cash and then to receive one sixth of any funds of my estate for distribution not already set aside.

Section 3. I wish at my death that each of my children receive one sixth of all funds not already set aside.

Section 4. I wish my children annually to pay to my wife four per cent on all legacys they may receive from my estate, except the $ 1000.00 afore mentioned given to my son, Willis, said four per cent to be a fund for the exclusive use of my wife to use as she may deem proper.

Section 5. If any of my children shall fail to pay annually the interest afore mentioned to their mother, then they shall forfeit One hundred dollars for each failure to do so unless in case of their death or any serious misfortune, in which event the heir shall be excused from said forfeit.

Section 6. In case of the death of any of my children before receiving any of the legacy mentioned in this my will, I wish my executors to divide such legacy as my child so deceased may be entitled to equally between said deceased's children.

Section 7. I wish at the death of my wife and after all of her debts are paid that if there is left of her estate a sum equal to five thousand dollars or a less amount, that said sum shall be equally divided between my five children to-wit: Jim, Salley, Em, Ellen, and Shelley, and any amount that may be above five thousand dollars that said amount above shall be equally divided between my six children.

Section 8. In the event that my son Shelley and I own jointly the property now owned by us, (to-wit: a house and ten acres of land in the town of Bowdon Ga, and described as follows- fronting North on College St., East on Johnson St., South by the Adamson estate and West by the lands of J.B.Fowler and Mrs. Jones), at my death I wish my executors to appoint five free holders, citizens of Bowdon, to appraise said above described property at what they, the appraisers, deem a fair valuation and in the event my son, Shelley, elects to take said property by paying into my estate one half of said valuation, then my executors to make him a deed to my one half interest. But in the event Shelley refuses to pay said amount as aforesaid, then any one of my children who may elect to take same at said valuation may do so and my executors are hereby empowered to make them a deed to my interest and in the event no one of my children elects to take my interest at said valuation, then in that event my executors are to sell the same at private sale, said proceeds to go into the general fund for distribution.

Section 9. I wish my executors to purchase with funds of my estate a tombstone (not to cost less than fifty nor more than one hundred dollars) to be placed at my grave on my cemetery lot in the town of Bowdon for myself and wife.

Section 10. I hereby appoint all of my children, living at the time of my death as the executors of this my will and I further appoint as chairman, the oldest of said executors.

Section 11. I expressly confer upon my executors the power as such to administer my estate and excusing them from giving any bond or making any returns to the Ordinary and I further confer upon my executors the full power and authority to sell any part of my estate not heretofore specially mentioned, at public or private sale, with or without notice as they may deem best and without any order of court, making good and sufficient conveyance to the purchaser and holding the proceeds of said sale to the same uses and trust as herein before declared in the several items in this my will.

This the 22nd day of July 1912 (Signed) Levi F. Sewell, Testator.
